QUALITY sound reproduction is the theatre's most important asset . . . The best recorded pictures are doomed to dismal failure if the sound reproduction is not efficient . . . Today more than ever before, the public is demanding "sound satisfaction". . . Every wise exhibitor is conscious of these facts . . . That is why so many are installing RCA Photophone equipment.

RCA Photophone Standard Size apparatus for theatres up to 1,200 seats and Special Size apparatus for theatres up to 500 seats, both AC operated, are conceded to be superior to any other types of equipment in their respective fields.

frequency of the machine mounted on its elastic support, but prevents all frequencies above about $\frac{1}{\pi\sqrt{mc}}$ from reaching the solid structure of the building. The principal influence of the internal mechanical resistance r is to limit the vibration at the resonant frequency. It is generally advisable therefore to use materials which have an appreciable internal resistance.

The values of c and r can be determined for any specimen of flexible material and, when known, can be used to determine the insulation value of any particular set-up. The value of c can be obtained by making static measurements of the amount of displacement of the compressed support for each additional unit of the compressing force. If this be done for a specimen of the flexible material of a certain thickness and area of cross-section, the compliance can be determined for any other thickness or area from the relation that c will be directly proportional to the thickness and inversely proportional to the area of the flexible support. When the internal resistance r is not too large, it can be determined by observing the successive amplitudes of the free vibrations of a mass m which rests upon a specimen of the flexible material, and solving for r by the usual log decrement method. Or, if the damping be so great that the free motion of m is non-oscillatory, r can be obtained from measurements on the experimentally determined resonance curve of the forced vibrations of m, or from measurements of the rate of return of m when it is given an initial displacement.

This last method, which may be regarded as a static method, is similar to the electrical method of determining the resistance R in series with an inductance L and a capacitance C by discharging the condenser through the inductance and resistance, and obtaining the "decay" curve. If the resistance of a certain specimen of material, as cork, felt, or rubber, has been determined by any of these methods, the resistance for any other thickness or area of the material can be appropriately determined from the relation that the resistance will be inversely proportional to the thickness and directly proportional to the area of cross section of the flexible support. Thus, if the values of c and r for a flexible material be known, it is possible to calculate, by means of Equation 1, the amount of insulation that will be obtained from the use of this material as a flexible support for a piece of equipment having a mass m. Tables are also available.

In general, there are two principal points to observe in the design of a flexible support for any particular piece of equipment; namely, the material should have a relatively large compliance c, and it should be loaded to nearly the upper safe limit of loading. In recent years there have been developed a number of flexible metallic supports which are finding application.

IN ORDER to show a specific example of sound insulation, suppose we have a machine weighing 1,000 lb. and having a base area of 20 square feet. Suppose further that the principal vibration of the machine has a frequency of 100 cycles per second (most machinery vibrations are less than 150 vibrations per second, and the assumed frequency of 100 is quite representative of typical machines). Suppose, as is frequently done, that a 1 inch slab of corkboard, 1.10 lb. per board foot, be placed between the machine and the floor. The loading on the cork will then be only 50 lb. per square foot, or slightly more than 1/3 lb. per square inch. (It is assumed that the compliance c in cm./dyne for a specimen 1 inch thick and I square centimeter in cross-section is 0.25×10^{-6} and the resistance r in mechanical ohms is 0.15×10^{5}.)

The calculation of the "transmissibility" can be done in the following manner:

Mass of machine in grams $= 1000 \times 454 = 4.54 \times 10^{5}$.

Area of base in square cm. $= 20 \times 144 \times 2.54 \times 2.54 = 1.86 \times 10^{4}$.

Therefore, the compliance of entire support, 1 inch thick and 20 square feet in cross section, is $.25 \times 10^{-6} \times \frac{1}{1.86 \times 10^{4}} = .134 \times 10^{-10}$ cm./dyne, and the resistance of the entire support is $.15 \times 10^{5} \times 1.86 \times 10^{4} = 0.28 \times 10^{9}$ mechanical ohms. Therefore

$$\tau = \sqrt{\frac{(.28 \times 10^{9})^{2} + \frac{10^{20}}{4\pi^{2} \times 100^{2} \times 0.134^{2}}}{(.28 + 10^{9})^{2} + \left(2\pi \times 100 \times 4.54 \times 10^{5} - \frac{10^{10}}{2\pi \times 100 \times 0.134}\right)^{2}}} = 0.93$$

Consequently, it is seen that the "transmissibility" is nearly equal to unity, and that the support therefore is not satisfactory for insulating vibrations of 100 or fewer per second.

If now the amount of cork be reduced so that it is loaded to 10 lb. per square inch, the total area of the supporting cork will be only 100 square inch, or 645 square centimeter. The compliance of the entire support will now be $0.25 \times 10^{-6} \times \frac{1}{645} = 0.39 \times 10^{-9}$ cm./dyne, and the resistance will be $0.15 \times 10^{5} \times 645 = .97 \times 10^{7}$ mechanical ohms. Therefore

$$\tau = \sqrt{\frac{(.97 \times 10^{7})^{2} + \frac{10^{18}}{4\pi^{2} \times 100^{2} \times 0.39^{2}}}{(.97 \times 10^{7})^{2} + \left(2\pi \times 100 \times 4.54 \times 10^{5} - \frac{10^{9}}{2\pi \times 100 \times 0.39}\right)^{2}}} = .037$$

It is seen, therefore, that with the bearing surface on the cork reduced to 100 square inches (that is, with the cork loaded to 10 lb. per square inch) the "transmissibility" is reduced to 0.037, or the amplitude of vibration transmitted to the floor will be only about 1/27 of what it would be if the machine were mounted directly upon the floor. These two numerical examples will serve to show not only the manner of making the calculations, but also the importance of selecting the proper type and design of flexible supports for insulating the vibrations of a machine from the rigid structure of a building.

IN THIS SECTION we shall deal particularly with the insulation of the air-borne noise which is generated within the equipment room. In many rooms this direct noise may reach a level as high as 60 or 70 decibels, in which case it is necessary that the walls and ceiling of the equipment room provide a sufficient amount of sound insulation to prevent this noise from being transmitted through the boundaries of the room into adjacent rooms.

In the first place, everything possible should be done to minimize the noise at its source. This is a mechanical problem in the design and selection of the equipment. Secondly, the amount of noise generated in the room can be reduced approximately 10 decibels by lining the walls and ceiling of the equipment room with a highly absorptive material, such as a mineral wool blanket, or acoustical tile. Finally, the walls and ceiling of the equipment room, together with any doors or windows in the room, should be designed so as to reduce the residual transmitted noise to such a level as can be tolerated in adjacent rooms.

Thus, suppose that the amount of noise in a room after the walls have been lined with absorptive material is 55 decibels, and that the amount of noise which can be tolerated in the adjacent room is 10 decibels. It then will be necessary to design walls and ceiling for the room which will provide an insulation of at least 45 decibels. This will require walls and ceiling having an insulation the equivalent of a 6 inch solid brick wall. There are many types of construction which will provide this amount of insulation, such as reinforced concrete, brick or stone and mortar, or staggered stud partitions with a layer of insulation suspended between the double walls.

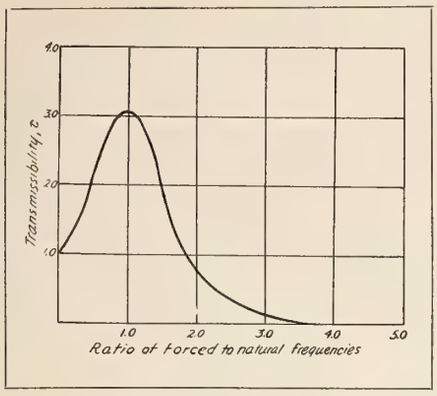

Fig. 2.—Showing how transmissibility of an elastic support (as indicated in Fig. 1) depends upon frequency. If the natural frequency of Mass m on its elastic support be about the same as the forced frequencies (such as commutator or fan blade frequencies) the "insulating" support will actually facilitate rather than impede the transmission of machinery vibration on the floor of the room. But if frequencies of vibrations generated by the machinery be four or five times the natural frequency of Mass m on its elastic support, there will be very little vibration transmitted to the floor.

THE MOST troublesome sources of noise from air conditioning equipment are fan and motor noises which are transmitted through the ventilating ducts. Tests which have been made at the Bureau of Standards and elsewhere on the transmission of sound through speaking tubes indicate that the amount of sound which is transmitted through a tube or duct depends upon the length of the duct, the cross-sectional area of the duct, and the material out of which the duct is made. The reduction of sound transmitted through such a tube or duct, expressed in decibels, is proportional to the length of the duct, is inversely proportional to the 0.76 power of the diameter of a circular tube, and is proportional approximately to the coefficient of sound absorption of the material which comprises the interior surfaces of the tube or duct. It is apparent therefore that long, narrow ducts, lined with material which is highly absorptive for sound, will provide a high degree of insulation for sounds which are transmitted through ducts. By introducing suitable sections of absorptive filters between the ventilating fan and the outlet, or between the outlets for adjacent rooms, it is possible to eliminate all of the difficulties which arise in connection with the transmission of noise through ventilating ducts. The problem is an engineering one which can be worked out prior to the installing of the equipment, and it can be calculated in such a way as to meet satisfactorily rigorous demands for silent operation.

IN GENERAL, the motion of air resulting from the ventilating of rooms is not sufficient to introduce any appreciable difficulty in auditoriums, except where noise may originate from the issuing of high speed air from nozzles. However, by proper stream-lining of the nozzles, it is possible to work with speeds which are adequate for all practical purposes without producing any disturbing noises. Since sound is propagated with a velocity of more than 1,100 feet per second, the velocity of the air would have to attain speeds of at least 20 to 30 feet per second before these wind velocities would have any appreciable influence upon the propagation of sound.

If there is to be any appreciable motion of air in an auditorium, it is slightly advantageous to have the upper layers of air moving in a direction from the stage toward the audience, as this will tend to refract the sound waves down toward the audience. However, unless the speed of the air is as great as 20 or 30 feet per second the amount of refraction will not be appreciable. It may be stated, therefore, that as a rule the motion of air in an auditorium does not have an appreciable effect upon the acoustical properties of the room.

RECENT experiments have shown that the humidity of the air has a rather marked influence upon the rate of absorption of high pitched sounds in a room. High frequency sounds are propagated better in humid air than in dry air, and since high frequency sounds are particularly important for the preservation of good quality in speech and music it is advantageous to maintain the air in a room at a relatively high humidity—not less than about 55 or 60%. On the other hand, where it is desirable to absorb all frequency components of sound, as for the reduction of noise in offices, it is advantageous to maintain a relatively dry air.

The time of reverberation in a room is given by

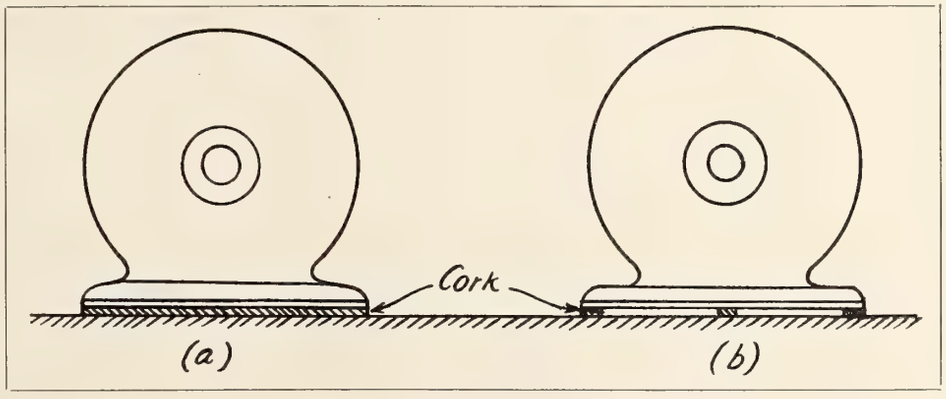
where V = volume of room in cubic feet; S = interior surface of room; α = average coefficient of sound-absorption of the interior surface of the room; and m is the absorption coefficient of the air in the room.

The coefficient m depends upon the frequency of the sound and the humidity of the air. At a temperature of 70 F, and for sound waves having a frequency of 4,096 vibrations per second, $m = 0.0027$ at 20% relative humidity, 0.0018 at 50% R. H., and 0.0013 at 80% R. H. It will be seen therefore that the absorption of sound in the air is twice as great at a relative humidity of 20% as it is at a relative humidity of 80%. (This explains why sounds in the open travel so much better on humid days than they do on dry days.) Although this dependence of absorption upon humidity is characteristic of low frequency as well as high frequency sound,



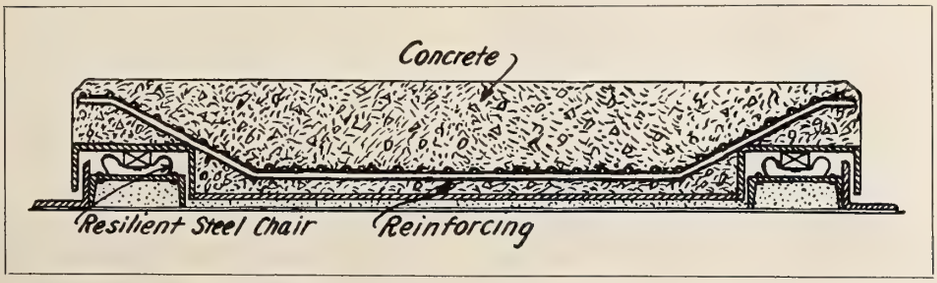


Diagram indicating the results of mounting a slab of cork under a fan or motor. As shown at (a), it may result in a condition in which the natural frequency of the mass of the machine on its cork support synchronizes with the fundamental frequency of vibration of the machine, in which case the cork support will accentuate rather than relieve the vibration communicated to the floor or foundation. If the bearing surface on the cork be greatly reduced, as indicated at (b), the natural frequency of the mass of the machine on its cork support will be much lower than the frequency of vibration of the machine, and the support will then relieve the vibration communicated to the floor.

Diagrammatic representation of a section of sound insulation machine base with all-steel frame and concrete deck.

the actual amount of absorption in the air is negligible for frequencies below about 1,024 vibrations per second. However, the absorption of the higher frequencies in the air is a significant factor, and its dependence upon humidity calls for careful consideration in planning the air conditioning equipment for buildings.

IN CONCLUSION, the acoustical problems which arise in connection with the air conditioning of buildings are: (1) the selection of equipment which operates without generating excessive noises; (2) the location and insulation of the equipment room so that no direct noises are transmitted through its walls and ceiling into adjacent rooms; (3) the mounting of the equipment on flexible supports which have been designed (based upon calculations) to provide sufficient insulation to prevent solid-borne vibrations from disturbing any part of the building; (4) the design of suitable filters for the ducts to prevent sound transmission from the equipment room to audience or work rooms, or from room to room; and (5) the control of the humidity so as to provide relatively humid air in speech and music rooms, and relatively dry air in offices and work rooms. All of these problems can be solved quantitatively in advance of installing the equipment, so that the control of sound in the air conditioning of buildings can be removed from the sometimes costly realm of guess-work and empiricism, and placed upon an unfailing and rigorous engineering basis.

Equipment News and Comment

SMALL SOUND HEAD

● A junior model sound head designed without moving parts, springs or gates, has been brought out by the Goodall Electric Manufacturing Company of Ogallala, Neb.

The film is pulled past the sound aperture at constant speed. Standard exciter lamps of any size are used. A special optical system throws a light beam of .0007 inches. The cassium P. E. cell is entirely shielded, both electrically and from stray lights, by a hollow aluminum cell house.

The aperture plate is adjustable, and a guide roller makes it possible to adjust either the film or the aperture plate while the equipment is in operation.

For use with Powers projectors, the long vertical framing lever makes it easy to secure an accurate framing adjustment from either side of the head. The projector heads are driven by constant speed motors and a conventional "V" belt drive. A small fly wheel is attached to the projector head and supported by an additional ball bearing support.

The junior sound head can be installed on any projector without the necessity of removing the present sound head or the lamp housing, as it fits in a small space about two inches high and six inches long, between the lamp house and the projector head.

CHANGEOVER ALARM

● A triple changeover alarm has been developed by the Golde Manufacturing Company of Chicago. And three alarms ought to make any projectionist—even if he's been out to the wee sma' hours of the morning—aware of the time to shift projectors.

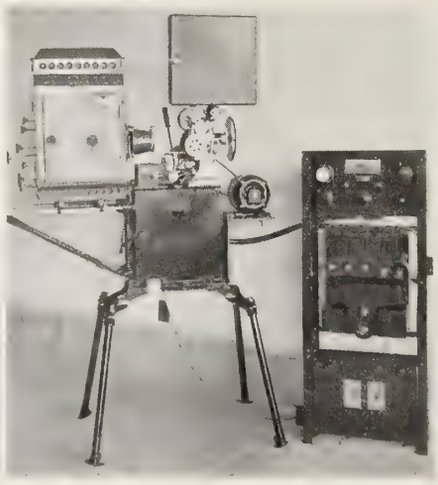
The device consists of three arms pivoted at one end. The pivoted ends are fixed to the wall of the upper magazine. The free ends, bearing small rollers, are micrometrically adjustable to three different lengths so that the first falls a minute before the changeover cue arrives, the second falls long enough before the cue to allow bringing the projector flywheel to operating speed, the third drops as the changeover cue appears.

The dropping of each arm against the magazine causes a click which is unmistakably unlike any other sound in the projection room, but is subdued. A fixed adjustment adapts the three-alarm device to use with both sizes of reel, without altering the micrometric adjustment.

THEATRE AMPLIFIER

● An amplifier designed especially for use in connection with theatre sound systems has been brought out by the Radiart Corporation of Cleveland.

This amplifier is designed to operate directly from a photocell, microphone or phonograph input. For microphone or phonograph operation a special plug and jack are furnished. A disc control box for changing from one turntable to the other, where a double phonograph input is used, can be supplied. Insertion of the plug in the jack automatically disconnects the photo cell input and matches a 500-ohm phonograph input or a two button microphone input to the proper impedance in the circuit. A special toggle switch is used to supply microphone current. At all other times this switch should be in the "off" position. The plug is supplied with three leads.



The amplifier is mounted between the two projectors so that the photocell lead is as short as possible. It can be bolted to the wall of the projector booth, or mounted on a special Radiart metal stand.

The photoelectric cells must be of the Caesium type. The wire in the center of the photocell lead is connected to the plus terminal of the photoelectric cell of each projector.

Knock-outs are provided in the amplifier so that connections can be made with conduit or BX. A double fuse block is provided in the amplifier, and 6-ampere fuses are used.

Tubes required for the operation of the amplifier, are one type '24, one type '27, one type '45, two type '50, and two type 581.

Output impedances are nine ohms, 16 ohms, and 500 ohms, for the main speakers—for the monitor speaker, a separate, 4,000-ohm winding.

HIGH AMPERAGE LAMP

● A new high intensity projection lamp for from 75 to 200 amperes, has been developed by Hall & Connolly of New York. The lamp follows the growth in the practice of using higher amperages, which, by the way is due not only to such factors as perforated screens, but more and more to the opacity of films resulting from the greater amount of interior shots—particularly with "artistic" sets using plenty of shadows. No further information concerning this lamp is at the moment available, but doubtless more data will be forthcoming for these columns soon. It is said that the lamp involves a number of new principles that will appreciably improve projection and facilitate operation of the equipment.

F. H. RICHARDSON'S COMMENT

• • AND ANSWERS TO INQUIRIES •

FILM DENSITY: A REAL PROJECTION PROBLEM

FILM DENSITY has got projectionists aroused. Among others, Lester Borst, projectionist at the Rivoli theatre in Two Rivers, Wis., writes, "You may chalk me down as one of the squawkers in regard to the density of present day films. The director of projection with whom you discussed this matter was perfectly right. I believe many small theatre projectionists and owners have been wanting to enter protests on this proposition for some time.

"Of course, the producers have their alibi, but we don't want alibis. We don't like them. Alibis don't put a good picture on the screen, and if the film is so dense that sufficient light cannot be forced through it with the power available in small theatres, then the projectionist can't either. It must be remembered that, as you have often said, there are something like ten non-deluxe theatres to every deluxe house.

"There are, however, certain producers who do not offend in this respect. It is a delight to project Columbia, M-G-M and Fox productions. Without exception, the entire product of these producers has been flawless, from both the photography and sound viewpoints. There are some other producers whose production are shining examples of what photography should not be from the projection viewpoint. As an example, a recent production, 'Dracula,' has some scenes in the early part which, so far as the amount of light available to the small town theatre projectionist was concerned, could have been replaced with black leader with almost as good results, and that is no exaggeration, either.

"I am working with straight d.c. arcs at 50 to 55 amperes. My optical system I am rather proud of, and I can say it functions 100%. But with some opaque scenes, I wonder if it functions at all."

There is in my mind no question but that Brother Borst's statements will be backed up by thousands of small town projectionists. It may be highly artistic to produce these dense scenes—that is to say, artistic if you are able to pump an absolutely maximum amount of light through them, but it is nonsense to say that a small theatre can do that, except in a few isolated cases.

Producers will do well to remember that, as I have before said, thousands of small-town theatres are supplying the only theatrical entertainment their patrons have. It is unfair. It is unjust. It is not good practice to make it possible to have a little added artistry on the screens of large theatres, when by so doing good results in practically all the smaller theatres are made impossible.

And while I am about it, let me direct the attention of the producer to another thing which is doing an enormous amount of damage, particularly to sound production. What we call "mass production" may be very well from the viewpoint of economy in production, but it is cold-blooded fact that mass production is doing an enormous amount of damage to sound. When a production is first brough out, some prints are carefully developed and the sound results are found to be a marvel of perfection. The projectionists who receive these prints are able to put before their audiences results which bring genuine applause. Then the production is put into what we call "mass production," with the result that there is an astonishing variation in different prints. The sound, as compared to the sound obtained from the first perfectly developed prints, is inferior in varying degree. You project one of the prints and the sound is fairly good. The next print is "mushy" as to sound. The music is not good and the conversations hard to understand. The producer may, and doubtless will, dispute this. He may, and probably will, lay the blame on the projectionist, on the theatre auditorium, on the equipment, etc., but freely acknowledging the possible faults in all these various things, the fact remains that what I have said is exactly true. There is a wide variation in different prints of the same production, and all the denials and alibis in this wide world won't alter that fact a single jot.

It is very true that mass production cheapens the process of reproducing prints, but I make the unqualified assertion that it does so at the expense of the box office.

Mass production doubtless cannot and should not be abandoned, but those "darkroom guys" should be watched quite a bit more carefully. They should be made to understand that their job is not to produce variable prints, but, so near as is humanly possible, to put out prints that are all the same and of the highest quality possible. Amen.

INSTALLING A SCREEN BORDER

A CORRESPONDENT from Ottawa, Ontario, wants to know the best method of bordering screens, and what is the best location as to the matter of height from the floor.

All things, even screen borders, are to a certain extent, dependent upon local conditions. However, in general, what is considered the best screen border is a black velvet, or if that be too expensive, some other light-absorbing material from three to four inches wide, next to the picture. This black should then shade off gradually from two to three feet, into whatever color is predominant in the screen surroundings.

The reason for the narrow black border is that the picture may overlap slightly on that strip, where it will be in a measure invisible. This has the effect of minimizing visibility of motion in the picture as a whole—that is to say, if the picture jumps or moves sidewise slightly, and its edges overlap on the material, the movement will not be nearly as visible to the audience as it would be were the border not there.

As to the position of the screen, that too depends largely upon local conditions. If there be no stage and the screen be placed on the wall, it should be no higher than is necessary to enable unobstructed sight lines from the eyes of the audience to the bottom of the picture.

If the screen be located on the stage it is best that it be as low as possible, which means that its lowest point should be at one end of a line drawn from that point to the eye position of a person seated in the front row of seats. The placing of a picture higher than is necessary only serves to impress upon the minds of the audiences the fact that it is a picture. Unnecessary height detracts from the illusion.

STANDARD RELEASE PRINT FAULTS

IN THE COURSE of a letter, Henry Hugh McWay, chief projectionist of the Pastime theatre in Whitinsville, Mass., says:

"A while back you suggested that those complaining about the condition in which they receive standard release prints, tell you in detail just what the faults consist of. Well, here are a few I have found in opening up some shipments of reels:

"The first frame staring you in the face is No. 11. This has happened in several prints. One reel, as I distinctly remember, had the No. 11, followed four frames later by No. 9. Then the numbers were separated properly until they got to No. 4, where Nos. 4 and 3 were two frames apart. Also, I find that changeover cues are generally missing. Oftentimes I receive productions in which the standard release print is in much worse condition than I have described."

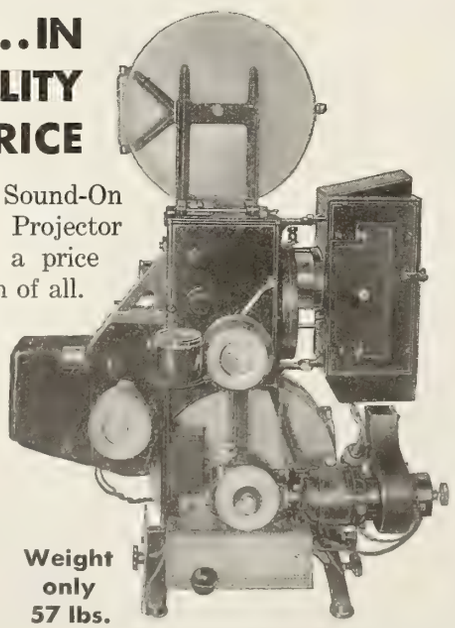
Let's hear from some more of you chaps. Also in making reports of this kind, please advise me of the class of theatre you are in. That is quite important. We know, of course, that the standard release print usually reaches the first-run houses in good condition. First-run houses, however, are not the only kind in the country. There are thousands of second- and third-run houses, and in a way these are of more importance than the first-run theatres, since it is they that get the bulk of patronage.

FROM THE WEST INDIES

FROM V. W. Taylor of Barbados, British West Indies, writes interestingly as follows:

"Dear Mr. Richardson: Having been a constant reader of the HERALD and BETTER THEATRES for a long time and observing your interest in all motion picture projectionists, I have concluded to submit a few lines which you may find of interest.

"Before sound arrived, motion picture projectionists could be very easily obtained in the West Indies. The chief requirement of the manager was that the wages asked be not in excess of $5 per week, except that the chief projectionist might arrive at the exalted wage of $9 per week. When sound arrived, however, it was found that these men could not handle the situation. I, myself, had just left school, when a manager asked if I would like a job in the projection room of his theatre. He knew I was quite keen about it. I accepted, and was taught to handle the sound equipment by the installing engineer from New York City. Being just out of school, I thought the pay was adequate.



"As most of my family are in New York, I expect myself to go there soon. Obviously I would like to continue in projection, but would like to be advised as to whether or not I should seek to enter the union, and how I might get in touch with the same. I am chief projectionist here and have had two years of experience. The equipment is Pacent. Thought I might be able to get an assistant's job in New York City. The theatres in the West Indies are operated on the cheapest possible scale.

"My work begins at 8 a.m., when I act as assistant to the manager. When this is through, I go to the projection room. The day's work ends at 10:15 p.m. My salary is $10 per week. Due to the depression, I was thinking I might try to obtain a job on some of the ships which are installing sound, but I don't know how to start. Will consider it a favor if you will send a few addresses of projectionists who will be willing to correspond."

There would not be a chance in the world for an outsider to secure projection work in New York City now. The union controls that, and there are many men out of work. As to the ship end of it, I don't know. I don't believe I could advise Friend Taylor how to go about that.

National S R A Carbons

IN many theatres using low intensity Reflecting Arc projectors, National SRA Carbons are satisfying the demands for a higher level of screen illumination brought about by the introduction of sound, color and larger screen image.

National SRA Carbons permit substantial increase in arc current and provide an intense crater brilliancy. This powerful crater light is focused on the aperture plate in a field of even intensity. Liberal latitude in positive crater position assures uniform illumination of screen.

The greatest volume of light available from the low intensity mirror arc projector is obtained by the use of National SRA Carbons. This is satisfying to both theatre manager and projectionist. The steady brilliant screen illumination they provide is equally pleasing to the patron. And——two satisfied patrons pay for the carbons used at each performance.

WHAT THE MANAGER SHOULD KNOW ABOUT SOUND

THE REPAIR OF SOUND EQUIPMENT

By AARON NADELL

This is the eighth of a series of articles designed especially for those directly responsible for the efficient and uninterrupted performance of reproduction equipment. The series will be concluded with the ninth article in the December 19th issue.

THERE IS NOTHING in which a theatre manager is more vitally interested than in the repair of sound equipment. It is true the manager does not make the repairs. But he pays for them.

The manager vouchers the bills for labor and materials. He is responsible for refunds to the audience if repairs are delayed. And he is the man who has to explain to the audience why those repairs are delayed, and keep them in the humor to come back next time in spite of their present inconvenience. He is largely responsible for the choice of such equipment and accessories as will require the minimum of repair.

It should, therefore, be entirely in accordance with the purpose of this series to give some brief attention, as non-technical as possible, to those methods of dealing with trouble which have proved themselves most successful in the hands of practical service engineers and projectionists.

I

Diagnosis and Treatment

IN SOUND WORK, curing a trouble is so often, and so largely, a matter of finding it, that the two problems are often looked upon as one. But the purposes of clarity and simplicity may be better served by maintaining the distinction —especially since, as will be noted later, there are troubles which cannot be found except by the process of curing them.

There are always many ways of finding out the causes of troubles. Obviously, the most efficient, for theatre purposes, are those that are the most rapid.

Varieties of Sound Troubles

It is not possible to list within the space of one article all the troubles which can possibly be experienced with every variety of sound installation. The most that can be done, and that only very incompletely, is to indicate some general types into which the majority of troubles may be grouped. Difficulties with sound equipment run the gamut, from complete loss of sound to minor distortions or disturbances in the sound. Again, there are difficulties of a wholly different nature, those that are not apparent to the audience, but which will ultimately, if neglected, give rise to troubles of the first group mentioned. Such vary from overheating of a condenser to signs of wear in a gear—a group of such infinite variety that only the briefest mention can be given to it here.

It should make for clarity and simplicity to review, first, the commoner methods of finding the causes of trouble, and, secondly —merely by way of illustration—some of the commoner types of troubles, and which method is most generally applied to each of these.

Locating Trouble

A trouble-finding routine is always of value in event of the unexpected, such as a sudden stoppage of sound. Each projectionist or projection crew can work out such a routine, suitable to the requirements of their own theatre.

The meters with which most sound installations are supplied, some very lavishly, are invaluable in connection with any trouble-finding routine. A routine for finding trouble quickly should include, first of all, a rapid glance at every meter in the system. Of equal importance with meters, in this connection, are the signal lights with which many systems are supplied. Exciting lamp filaments, and filaments of all vacuum tubes, also afford visible indication of the presence of necessary currents. In nearly every instance of unexpected interruption in sound a planned procedure of checking all meters and lit filaments will localize the trouble in a few moments.

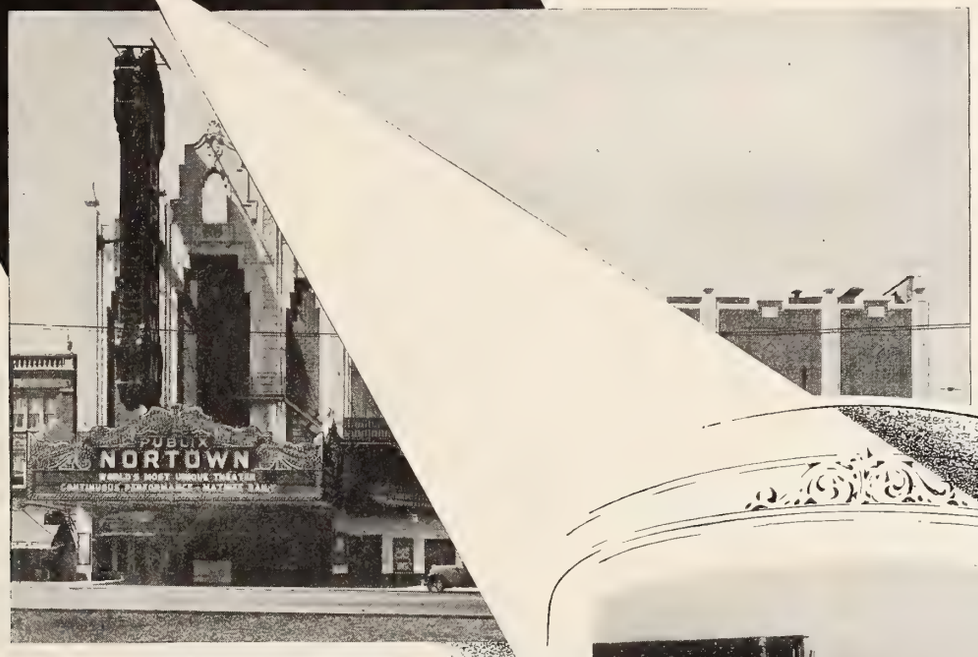
Where speaker switches or fuses are located on the stage, inspection of those items by the stage crew is a necessary part of the routine.

The desirability of having such a routine prepared in advance of emergency is that preparation saves time. If serious trouble persists every meter and filament will be inspected ultimately. But if no routine has been prepared some may be observed several times, unnecessarily, before others are checked at all. Planned and orderly inspection is the quickest, and leaves nothing overlooked. When meters and similar visible indications offer no help, a process of elimination may be in order.

Process of Elimination

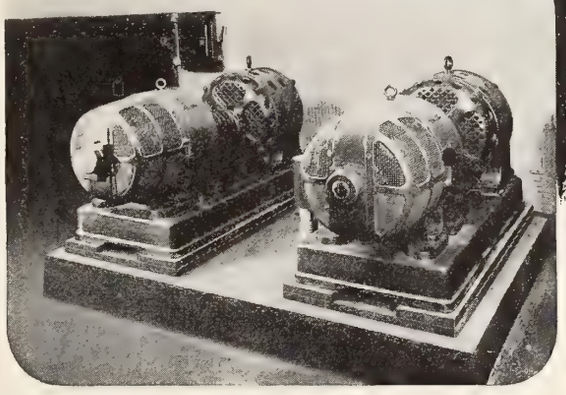
"Process of elimination" is a phrase that has come to be used, so often that its meaning is shrouded in vagueness. Every step that can be taken to find any trouble is a step in elimination. Every attempt that does not work it has at least eliminated itself, it need not be tried again, something else can be tried. If that is all "process of elimination" means, it means nothing more than guessing.

Intelligent and efficient application of that process obviously calls for wholesale rather than retail doses. In many cases one-half of the entire sound system should be eliminated as a cause of the trouble by one simple test. The next test should eliminate half of the remainder, and so on. Wherever this can be done the actual cause, however deeply hidden, must soon be revealed. There will be many instances in which such complete and thorough application is impossible, but these numerous exceptions do not destroy the general rule. They are mere reminders of the fact that sound troubles are of such various natures that no one process, not even process of elimination, can be applied to all of them.



Rapid and efficient elimination can be applied only through the aid of a thorough familiarity with the switching systems of the sound installation and with the interrelations of every separate part. If the projectionist has any slightest doubt as to just what each portion of the installation is doing, and how it relates to every other portion, the manager can help him greatly by asking the manufacturer or service engineer for a "block schematic."

The Block Schematic



The "block schematic" is a drawing in which every projector, amplifier, etc., is shown as a square or oblong, and the connecting wires drawn in as single lines. A glance at such a drawing reduces even the most complicated sound installation to bald simplicity. The block schematic applying to any one theatre can be memorized in five minutes, or less. Its use

UNIFORM PROJECTION

After all, that's what counts!

NORTOWN THEATRE, CHICAGO—
A PUBLIX THEATER

BECAUSE of their ability to meet the particular power requirements of the projection booth, and to provide a steady direct current which produces an arc of uniform, unvarying intensity, ROTH Actodectors were selected by Publix for their new Nortown Theatre, Chicago.

Thirty-seven years of experience by Roth Engineers has resulted in perfectly balanced construction throughout the entire unit. Actodectors, resistors and control panels are so matched as to assure continuous, uniform projection even during change-over.

Some of the Many Advantages of ROTH Actodectors

1. Accurately built and liberally proportioned.
2. Economical in operation. Actodectors operate at low voltage which reduces loss in ballast resistors.
3. Laminations are non-ageing and made of low-loss silicon steel for increasing efficiency.
4. Rolled steel frames—light weight—more efficient.
5. Any number of arcs can be carried within the ampere rating.
6. Especially satisfactory with sound projection equipment.
7. They supply steady direct current power of constant voltage—brilliant screen illumination of uniform intensity results.

simplifies the problem of isolating any hidden trouble to one or another of the oblongs which the block schematic shows. The switching arrangements between those oblongs are plainly drawn, and make confusion of any kind almost impossible. The projectionist, of course, should not have to refer to the drawing in time of trouble. It is too simple—it can too easily be carried in his head.

Types of Elimination

By use of the block schematic and the switching system, successive portions of the apparatus are eliminated until the guilty part is all that remains. With some forms of trouble, this process is not the most efficient. In the case of disturbing noises, for example, it is not apparatus, but possible causes, that are most usually eliminated, and this is done largely by classifying the noise heard. A noise is not a hum. Noises are of several kinds, and hums are of several pitches, or frequencies. If the manager, calling his projection room to complain of a disturbance in the sound, is able to classify the disturbance accurately he is extending the most valuable kind of cooperation to his projection staff. He is eliminating an almost infinite number of possibilities at one stroke, and leaving only a comparative few to be investigated. In some cases, as in the case of sprocket-hole noise, such cooperation makes all further investigation unnecessary. Nothing remains but to apply the cure.

With some troubles it may not be possible to carry analysis very far, and it may be impractical to try to eliminate various portions of the equipment. In such cases one eliminates cures. That is, listing all probable cures for the difficulty in question, the "trouble-shooter" applies these one at a time, trying the most likely ones first. This method is especially necessary where the cause and location of the difficulty are known, as in a case where the sound system is picking up the broadcast of a nearby radio station. The exact wire which is acting as an aerial in that case may have been found, and yet the process of detuning that wire may require several varied attempts before success is achieved.

Logical Procedure

The process of applying successive cures is especially one which calls for calmness and reasoned procedure. It may seem logical the most likely cures should be applied first, but one of them may take a great deal of time. A less hopeful remedy may happen to be far simpler and quicker. Which of the two is to be tried first will then depend on a careful balance between the time each will take and the probability, in each case, of success. Under such circumstances hurried or hysterical work is, bar luck, only wasting time. The man in charge must know exactly what he is doing, and must be calm enough to be willing to make haste slowly. The front of the house can help him by leaving him alone, and refraining from unnecessary requests as to the progress of the work

Much the same considerations of balancing hopefulness against facility apply to a process of eliminating equipment which has progressed so far that switches no longer serve, and apparatus must be dismantled or substituted. The question of which substitution, or which dismantling job, is most likely to produce results, is to be weighed against the question of which is the quicker, and a decision reached according to the law of averages.

It is true, of course, that strictly logical procedure can be carried too far, and that luck, intuition or experience may often achieve results more rapidly. Experience will apply logical procedure, disregarding many possibilities without bothering to test them, precisely because experience has shown that they are only remotely likely in spite of surface logic. Luck and "intuition" are incalculable. The gambler will call upon them; the conservative will despise them. When they go wrong they complicate greatly the task of getting back to orderly procedure; when they work at all they work miracles. Each to his own choice.

Four General Methods

To go back, it will be seen that four general methods of finding trouble have been listed so far. The first is a routine search for obvious evidences of the cause of the trouble—such as may be given by a wrong meter reading or an unlit tube or signal lamp. This search can be made so rapidly (when it has been systematized in advance) that it is nearly always advisable as a first step in case of unexpected difficulty. The other three methods are three different applications of the process of elimination, and may be summarized as follows:

1. Elimination of apparatus by switching or substitution.
2. Elimination of types of trouble by classifying the one present.
3. Elimination of possible cures by trying many in succession.

All of these three methods may be applied economically by considering the time required for each test, as well as the possibility of progress to be gained.

Clues in Tracing Trouble

However, the application of those trouble-finding methods is not as simple as a mere reading of a list may seem to imply. Purely logical procedure is the exception rather than the rule, and applied only in the case of very serious difficulty. Serious troubls are often those which offer no clues; it may be the lack of clues that makes them serious. In ordinary cases, the nature of the trouble itself, the way in which it manifests itself, the time and circumstances under which it appears, and past experience with the same equipment are, taken together, constitute indications likely to be more valuable than any amount of methodical searching. In some instances those clues will be so strong as to make unnecessary even the preliminary routine glance at meters and filaments.

Appreciation of the meaning of the clues offered may or may not require intimate acquaintance with every principle and detail of the functioning of the equipment. The background of knowledge and experience possessed by the "trouble-shooter" will determine the extent to which portions or fragments of the logical methods outlined above may have to be called upon to supplement the message of the clues.

After the preliminary routine of checking meters, etc., has been followed, an experienced "trouble-shooter" will often take time out to search for further indications, such as overheating, or even to stand still and do nothing while thinking over and trying to fathom the meaning of any clues that he may have found.

Procedure in Hidden Troubles

In cases of hidden trouble, then, the full procedure of attack may be listed as follows:

1. Consideration of obvious clues, if any.
2. Routine search for obvious indications, such as meter readings, signal lamp indications, unlit filaments, etc.
3. In some instances, search for further clues, easily found, such as evidence of overheating.
4. In some instances time out for purely mental analysis of clues found.
5. Application of processes of elimination until trouble is localized in apparatus, classified as to type, or eliminated by successive trials of all possible cures, starting with the quickest and most probable.

This procedure is far from invariable. Item 4 might be substituted for Item 2, for example. In case of trouble occurring at opening or changeover, inspection of switch positions should be included in Item 2.

The procedure as listed is by no means exhaustive. There are always other means of getting at the causes of any trouble. The list given pretends to no more than presenting a fairly typical, moderately satisfactory method of running down ordinary trouble in an average installation. But the alternative to this, or some kind of reasoned, rehearsed and logical procedure, may fairly be described as "running around like a chicken with its head cut off," which everyone will admit is the worst possible way of trying to find any kind of trouble in any kind of mechanism, in spite of occasional miraculous luck.

Experience may at times seem to act without plan, but in fact it does not. The principles listed in this article have not been invented out of thin air. They are based on long contact with the work of many experienced service engineers and projectionists, not a few of whom are rated by their employers as being among the most skilful and competent in the country.

II

Treatment

ASSUMING THE CAUSE of any trouble to have been found, cure is often a very simple matter—replacing a fuse, resoldering a wire, clearing a short circuit. On other occasions the cure may be more difficult, and call for replacing a part. But in many instances it may not be practical to trace the matter as far as the individual part. It may be preferable, from the point of view of saving time, to replace an entire section of the equipment—one of the oblongs in the block schematic. Such extensive replacements were more common in the past than now.

More often today, when the trouble has been traced as far as one of the oblongs in a block schematic, that unit is replaced temporarily, in order to restore the show to normal operation, and then further search is made, in the projection room, to find the exact cause of the trouble. The individual unit under investigation is treated as far as possible in the same way the entire system was treated, by process of eliminating parts. Complete application of the same method is seldom possible, because switching systems will be lacking, and it will often be necessary to run through part after part in sequence, rather than by eliminating numbers of parts at one operation.

Whenever curing a trouble may be a matter of either replacement or repair, both methods can be called into play—the replacement being made on a temporary basis, for the sake of the show, while subsequent repairs in the projection room are resorted to as a matter of economy.

Troubles, of course, may be due to other things than deterioration in the equipment itself. The conditions under which the equipment operates may change. A ground connection may have altered in resistance; a disturbing motor or other electrical apparatus may have been set up near by, or the voltage of the supply line may have become too high or too low.

Repair of Equipment

Three requirements apply to all projection room repairs. The first is to do the work as neatly and thoroughly as possible, in order to prevent further trouble from the same source, or new touble because of improper soldering or similar faults. The second, and equally important, one is to do the work strictly in accordance with the manufacturer's standard practice. Non-standard repairs can be a most serious hindrance to finding further troubles, whether due to the same cause or to something else entirely that may develop in the future. An accumulation of non-standard repairs makes tracing trouble almost impossible. The third and last requirement is to work quickly, and this requirement must remain the last. When speed is essential for restoring the show the work should be gone over afterward for permanence.

Permanency of Cures

Every trouble is an opportunity in disguise because it is a lesson. Therefore no repair is a proper repair if it leaves any avoidable possibility of the same trouble recurring. A weakness once revealed should be removed forever. In some instances the appropriate precautions can be taken in the projection room; in others representations to the manufacturer may be in order. Except only where the weak link cannot possibly be strengthened, the fact that the same trouble occurs twice should be fairly presumptive evidence of carelessness on the part of someone.

Recapitulation

The finding of trouble is no more than the application of one or more simple rules of procedure, which have been derived largely from experience, but are based, ultimately, upon nothing more than common sense. The speed and accuracy of the work, however, will depend very largely upon a thorough knowledge of the installation, of its "block schematic" in the first instance, and in more difficult cases of the details of those electrical and mechanical principles upon which its operation depends.

The treatment of trouble is matter either of replacement or of repair—the first can sometimes be arranged for upon a temporary basis to carry the show over until the second is completed. However, replacement is not always the quicker method, nor is projection room repair invariably the cheaper. Depending on the circumstances, the reverse may also be true.

Whatever treatment is applied should always do more than cure the trouble in hand. It should profit by the trouble to the extent of making its reappearance as nearly impossible as may be. It should be carefully done to prevent other troubles which may arise as a result of careless repairs. It should be done according to standard and blueprint because an accumulation of non-standard repairs turns an orderly sound installation into an impenetrable mystery in which no one can tell one wire from another.

A few of the commoner troubles, and of the more obvious means of dealing with them, are reviewed below. The list given does not even begin to exhaust the category of possible sound difficulties, to say nothing of possible methods of treatment; that would be wholly impossible in these pages. But—it is not merely that space forbids a more lengthy list—the manager is not interested in too many such details. All that he wants (and all that can be given him here) is some little light on how to tell when his sound troubles take too long, or cost too much to repair, and on how to choose equipment or accessories that can be repaired most quickly and most economically. The brief trouble-list that follows should, therefore, be regarded as no more than a few examples and illustrations of the principles he has just reviewed.

In the examples given will be found some mention of the best time—in the course of treating any trouble—for calling upon the service engineer. It is very difficult to be definite upon this point. The engineer should be called when he can be of most use, and just when that will be will depend very largely upon the competence and experience of the projection crew in charge. The examples given may afford some useful hints, especially in indicating that a call for help made after some progress has been gained in identifying the trouble will often be more efficient than a call put through immediately after the trouble appears. But so many factors enter into this matter that every case is a rule unto itself, and such small hints as can be offered amount only to a very slight reinforcement of the manager's own common sense.

III
Types of Sound Troubles and Their Treatment

IF GROUPING and classifying of sound troubles is to be attempted, perhaps the most conspicuous division is the one between those troubles which manifest themselves in the sound and those whose effects, for the time being at least, are confined to the projection room. Included in the second group are the innumerable class of warnings, which range from a faulty meter reading to excessive projector vibration. To choose arbitrary but convenient names, these may be designated as "audible" and "inaudible" troubles.

"Audible Troubles"

1. Loss of Sound

Complete loss of sound is one of the easiest troubles to run down. In the majority of cases the block schematic will solve the problem. Either sound currents are not being created at the source of pick-up, or they are lost or side-tracked somewhere along their route to the speakers. A routine check for obvious clues, may be followed by use of the switching system, supplemented, perhaps, by a pair of headphones. If more than one man is available one may be trying the emergency amplifier or the other projector or the other pick-up system (disc in case of trouble with film, and vice versa) while the other checks meters. The location of the trouble should, in most cases, be found almost immediately. Substitution—as of one amplifier or projector for another—will often restore the show while more detailed search is made.

If the projection crew have the experience necessary to carry on this far, this, and no earlier, is the point at which the service engineer should be called. The engineer may be able to bring a replacement unit with him without loss of time. It will often be possible and desirable to delay the call still further. The projection crew in many cases will be competent to run down the particular unit at fault and find precisely the guilty part. Where that can be done, the service engineer will sometimes be able to suggest, over the telephone, emergency measures to restore the show, which it is not fair to expect of any but the most expert projectionists. A great many "haywire" substitutions are possible in any system, and queer tricks often work out well. A bucket of salt water has been known to do duty for a rheostat. Bell-ringing transformers out of the nearest hardware store can sometimes serve in place of a burnt-out power transformer. Radio-store parts will often help. The need for such trick contrivances will depend on the seriousness of the emergency and the distance of the theatre from sources of regular supply, but obviously the service engineer or the manufacturer can suggest them only if the exact nature of the trouble is known. Many a show has been saved by such curious means.

In large cities, where service and supplies are quickly available, withholding the call for help—wherever projectionists feel competent to carry on alone,—will save delay by enabling the engineer to bring the right part with him, and this consideration applies, not only to a break-down in sound, but to other, though less serious, troubles, in which, because the show can get along somehow or other, trick replacements are of negligible importance.

2. Loss of Volume

The general methods applicable to finding the cause of a complete loss of sound will often prove successful in tracing the cause of low volume, but the difficulty of judging proper volume when checking with headphones may prolong the search, or even require a different line of approach. Where two men are available it may be as well if one tries to judge volume along the line, looking for evidence of lack of amplification or of loss of volume not introduced by proper controls, while the other proceeds with the successive application of a number of possible remedies. Distortion of sound may be run down in much the same way, but in many instances, meter evidence of overloading will be available and conspicuous.

3. Noises and Hums

Noises and hums are a large family, and an appreciation of the exact nature of the disturbance heard is the first step in eliminating some of the almost innumerable causes possible. Flutter—which is not a noise, but more in the nature of a distortion—is distinctive and unmistakable. So are sprocket hole and framing line noises, and many more. Other disturbances, although distinctive, offer no clues to their cause. Elimination, first of equipment, and later of all possible causes, is in order in most cases of this kind, and sometimes requires much time. Experience is of the greatest help with troubles of this nature, and experienced service, wherever available, should be called upon as soon as elimination of the equipment has failed to yield results.

"Non-Audible Troubles"

The number of possible troubles of this class is so large that no attempt to review them is possible in this space. Almost every single piece of equipment in the projection room can show signs of one trouble or another. Replacement is always possible, but not always advisable. The part showing the trouble may not be at fault: there may be some ulterior cause. Replacement in advance of careful inspection is highly uneconomical.

Routine precautionary inspections will turn up the majority of troubles of this class, many of which can then be cared for at very small expense. Where such inspections are efficient, non-audible troubles appearing suddenly in the course of the show, will nearly always be of an emergency nature. Elimination of portions of the equipment is seldom required in such cases. The trouble reveals its own location. Careful meter readings—perhaps with a portable test meter—may be necessary in the course of any search for underlying causes.

IV
Equipment for Finding Trouble

WITHOUT PROPER equipment, nearly any trouble job will take far more time. Some are nearly impossible.

For tracing sound through the system, a pair of high resistance headphones are required. For tracing supply currents, a good volt-ammeter, with several scales, is very much in order; a direct-current instrument of this type is almost a necessity wherever batteries are employed. A multiple-range a.c. voltmeter, a buzzer and an ohm-meter complete the list of ordinary testing tools.

A volume indicator, multiple-frequency reels or loops of film, and a multiple-frequency disc record, are moderately expensive but well worth having wherever high quality is of importance.

A tube tester of the type used by radio service men is invaluable. It will find trouble in an amplifier far more rapidly than any other known method. Although no such tester, so far as the writer knows, is now commercially available for the largest tubes in theatre use, many makes and models can be obtained which will fit the smaller tubes in any theatre, and all the tubes in many.

The cost of all the test equipment listed above need not run to more than about two hundred dollars, and with a little duplication can be had for far less. The meters on the tube-and-amplifier tester, for example, can be used instead of the separate voltmeters and ammeters previously listed. An a.c. voltmeter of the modern copper-oxide-rectifier type makes a reasonably satisfactory volume indicator for all ordinary purposes. Most ohm-meters have a third binding-post and a double scale, and can also be used as voltmeters. If the projection staff is sufficiently familiar with them, d.c. voltmeters, ammeters and ohm-meters are largely interchangeable.

A fair supply of electricians tools, including particularly a good soldering iron and rosin-core solder, are of first importance. A rush repair with an audience waiting can be badly hampered by lack of a screwdriver small enough, or a pair of pliers large enough, or a soldering iron hot enough for the work in hand.

Correction

Under a picture on Page 74 of the September 26th issue of Better Theatres, showing a view of the Fox theatre in Pomona, Cal., credit for the design should have been given to C. A. Balch, while the architects should have been named as Walker & Eisen, Ltd., and C. A. Balch. Better Theatres is happy to make this correction.

Accessories for Sound Equipment

ACCESSORIES for music and sound reproducing devices are many and varied. This comparatively new phase of the motion picture business has brought new demands upon the theatre. In the word "theatre" are included the exhibitor and the projectionist. These new phases of theatre operation must be studied, and included in the product necessary to operation of such equipment are: Pick-ups, motors, needle cups and covers, automatic stops, headsets, turntables, volume controls (rheostats), electric filter, amplifiers (power packs), radio tubes, loud speaker units, speakers (magnetic or electro-dynamic), horns (exponential), rotometers, stroboscopic discs, cabinets and cabinet hardware. A well balanced set is imperative and for such a set there are equipment requirements which cannot be overlooked.

There has also been brought out a rectifying device for use with the exciter lamp on the projector. This device eliminates the use of batteries or rectifiers for supplying D. C. current to the filament of the lamp. It consists of a transformer, chokes and condensers, and uses Argon gas tubes for the rectifying unit.

Accounting Systems

BOOKKEEPING systems taking into consideration specific requirements of the theatre have been developed to care for the operation of motion picture houses. These may be had either in loose leaf form or in solid book form covering an entire year's operation. These systems are designed to cover fully receipts and disbursements, film used, tickets sold, etc., and enable the exhibitor to check with promptness and accuracy his daily, weekly business or the business for the year. Prices range from $1.50 to $3.50.

Acoustical Products and Engineering

PROPER acoustics is today a subject of outstanding importance in motion picture theatres. The introduction of sound films has necessitated the establishment of a more exact standard of acoustics than was necessary when motion picture theatres simply had the acoustical problem involved in orchestral and incidental music, because speech demands a more exact acoustical condition than music. In addition, the use of sound films made possible a range of volume never before possible, and made it necessary as well to reproduce carefully very shade and inflection of the human voice. New types of speakers, special sound screens, etc., add to the problem.

An auditorium that is faulty in acoustical properties is incapable of being used with any degree of satisfaction for sound films. Due also to the limitations of the recording and reproducing apparatus it is essential that the acoustical properties of the theatre in which sound films are reproduced shall aid in the quality of the reproduction rather than introduce added distortion and confusion. The problem of acoustics in auditoriums has been reduced to a science, and proper acoustics may be built into new theatres or provided in existing theatres through a proper study of theatre design and the use of interior finishes which have the qualities that control sound. Extensive research within the past few years has produced types of interior finish which combine the desirable acoustical characteristics with excellent decorative possibilities. These materials have an architectural flexibility of standard at least approximating that of interior finishes.

The problem of acoustics in theatres has resulted in special consideration of them by certain manufacturers who have established special departments, headed by experts, to cooperate with theatre owners and architects in the acoustical treatment of theatre buildings.

Act Announcers

THE prevalence of combination bills in both motion picture and vaudeville theatres gives added significance to the act announcer. Naturally, in new houses these should be installed during construction so that they will harmonize with the interior design. In remodeling, suitable designs may be obtained for the decorative scheme decided upon. Act announcers are either automatically or hand controlled, with the automatic ones controlled remotely or from the stage. The general principle of the act announcer may be successfully used in window display promotion for the announcing of current and forthcoming bills. Such mechanism must be automatically operated.

Advertising Films

THEATRE publicity assumes many forms and the alert exhibitor utilizes each at some time or other to suit the occasion. One of the most effective forms is the publicity film, which may be presented as a local news reel, a trailer, a presentation, a leader, a playlet, etc. In some cases as many as ten such films are run, giving the exhibitor advertising for his own business or an income from the charge he makes for thus advertising other businesses.

Advertising Novelties

THE thing to be accomplished through the use of advertising novelties, of one type or another is the chief consideration in their selection. Among the popular novelties, however, which have been used by theatres for stimulating matinee business, building up juvenile performances or bolstering business on week nights are balloons, thermometers on which are imprinted pictures of stars, buttons, badges, pennants, confections, toys, etc. A popular children's matinee stunt can be obtained by giving away a variety of novelty toys. These can be had in boxes containing 100 toys ranging in value from 5c to 15c at a cost of $3.00.

Air Conditioning and Cooling Equipment

AIR CONDITIONING in the theatre has already arrived at a degree of importance making it one of the necessary adjuncts of the modern motion picture theatre. Because in the theatre people are closely associated physically in great numbers, and for the purpose of realizing enjoyment, the atmospheric conditions of the auditorium especially must not be dependent upon the weather or on any other chance factor. Enjoyment of the entertainment is closely connected with comfort, and the popularity of the theatre is of course influenced by its effect upon health.

Air conditioning does not only mean facilities for cooling a theatre during the hot months, but involves distribution of fresh, clean air at proper temperatures and pressures, and without drafts in the breathing zone. This may mean that the system should be capable of functioning in connection with the heating apparatus as well as with the cooling facilities.

Local conditions influence to some extent the kind of an air conditioning system required in any specific theatre. Some could achieve some measure of good air conditions with equipment costing as low as a few thousand dollars. Others require more elaborate apparatus.

Included in equipment designed to provide better air conditions in the auditorium than would be the case were there no artificial means whatever, are simple ventilating systems, by which air from the outside is drawn into the theatre and given circulation through the agency of fans. At the other extreme are systems costing a great deal more which give the theatre operator entire control of the air conditions in his theatre, regardless of the weather or the season of the year.

The cooling method in the more elaborate apparatus requires a refrigeration chamber, in which the air is drawn through water vapor, the water having been cooled by means of a gas compressor, the refrigeration agent being carbon dioxide or other chemical of similar action.

Anchors for Chairs

THESE are expansion shell bolts used for anchoring theatre seats to the floor. They are made in several types. Type No. 1 is used with a carriage bolt and is inserted in the hole and set with a small setting tool before placing the chair in its final position. This tool is furnished without extra charge. The No. 2 type is used with a square head machine bolt which has been specially heat treated to prevent any possibilities of stripping the threads when drawn up tightly with a socket wrench. This type No. 2 is attached to the leg of the chair before placing the chair in position. The method of application is to insert the bolt through the hole in the leg of the chair and turn the expansion shell far enough up on the bolt so that it comes in contact with the under surface of the chair leg. This small amount of friction prevents the shell from turning around. The shells will withstand the the chair seats, as well as the motion and constant vibration of raising and lowering hard usage they must necessarily stand when the seat is occupied. The shells are furnished to the user complete, consisting of the expansion shells together with a washer and whatever style or length of bolt the customer may specify. Different makes of chairs take different lengths of bolts, and stock is carried to cover this variation. Bolts range from 1¾ inches to 3 inches in length.

MANY PLACES in the theatre may profitably be made beautiful through the use of art plants and flowers. The lobby, foyer, auditorium walls and organ grill offer excellent places for such use. Many theatres are capitalizing the seasonal rejuvenation it is possible to achieve in the house through the use of plants and flowers. Much progress has been made recently in the manufacture of beautiful art flowers, plants and trees of all kinds. Not only do art plants and flowers provide a natural beauty in the theatre but they may advantageously be used in brightening dark corners and barren spaces.

Another important use of batteries in motion picture theatres is in emergency lighting systems which augment the regular source of light power as a safeguard against breakdown of the local system. They are installed for instant service upon such a breakdown, being placed in operation automatically. Besides giving the necessary power for lighting, they are capable also of affording the projector motors power for some time. Prices depend on the nature of the installation.

Bell and Buzzer Signal Systems

PERFECT CONTINUITY of the performance depends upon bell, buzzers and signal systems. The projection room and the stage and the managers office keep in constant touch with each other by various systems of signaling, and only by these means can coordination exist. The ushers have means of signaling the doorman or director as to which part of the house to send patrons, and the ushers are informed by a seat indicating device where and how many seats are empty or filled.

Bulletin Boards, Changeable

CHANGEABLE BULLETIN boards, which come under this heading involve the use of a grooved board on which are placed white enameled brass letters, white enameled die cast aluminum letters or white or red celluloid letters of various sizes as may be desired to work out an attractive announcement. The background of the board is usually covered with a dark broadcloth surrounded by a frame in mahogany or extruded cast bronze. The letters are hung in the horizontal grooves of the board and the announcement accomplished through placing of the letters in their most advantageous manner. These changeable bulletin boards are made in various sizes ranging from 10 inches by 6 inches to large boards.

Many theatres have adopted signs of this type for use in the lobby in announcing coming and present attractions. In fact the ease with which announcements may be set up or changed gives these bulletin boards a wide range of use in the motion picture house.

Also used on bulletin boards, but particularly adapted also for marquise signs, to announce the current attraction, are letters of raised opal glass mounts in oxidized finished metal frames and illuminated from the inside by electric lamps.

Cable, Motion Picture

MOTION PICTURE cable and other asbestos insulated wires occupy an important place in theatres, being extensively used in the projection room for the projectors, for spot and flood lights, switchboards, motor and grid resistance leads and the like. The two important features of motion picture cable are flexibility and immunity to flame and heat. Owing to the intense heat and possible danger from fire in projection booths the conductor must have the finest kind of insulation. Because of the necessity for constant changes of position for floods and arcs the cable must be very flexible and tough enough to endure wear.

Canopies, Theatre

USE OF ARTISTIC canopies by motion picture theatres is growing in popularity among houses of all sizes. A canopy serves a number of practical purposes. They offer theatres an excellent advertising medium while giving to the house an attractive and inviting entrance. During inclement weather they offer protection to waiting patrons.

Canopies are usually constructed of sheet metal and may be obtained in a variety of designs. They are furnished with glass roof or with steel ceiling and metal roof. Numerous interesting standard designs have been developed by marquise manufacturers especially for theatre use. These are easily installed and are shipped to theatres in convenient sections. Suggestions for attractive designs are available. Inquiries should be accompanied by approximate measurements of the front of the building where the canopy is to be used.

Not only are practically all of the new theatres being erected installing marquees but they are being exclusively used in the remodeling of the old houses, because of the effective manner in which they give to the theatres a new and pleasing appearance at small cost.

Carbons

MOTION PICTURE projection carbons might possibly be considered one of the most staple products in the operation of the moving picture theatre.

There is no factor, indeed, which can claim any more attention in the successful operation of the theatre than the light which is used for projection, and quite a little depends on both the quantity and quality of projector carbons kept on hand in the projection booth.

Modern projection demands the best in quality in projection carbons today, and this demand is being met by the carbon manufacturers through their scientific and research departments with products that have kept pace with modern progress.

Carpets

BECAUSE of the hard wear to which theatre carpets are subjected it has been found that there is no saving in the selection of cheap carpets. The heavier and deeper the nap the more life may be expected of a carpet. Generally, floor coverings and carpets should be of a nature that rest on the floor and give the impression of stability and foundation upon which one may walk with security. A carpet that is fussy, light in color and over-decorated has a tendency to give the impression that it is not resting—but rather floating. Obviously this is an unfavorable impression. Carpet padding used under the carpet not only provides a softer and more comfortable feeling to the foot but reduces friction and adds many years to the life of the carpet by keeping it away from direct contact with the hard floor.

Carpets also should be selected with a view to the acoustics of the theatre.

Carpet Cushioning

IN THEATRES, where continuous coming and going of patrons subjects the carpets in aisles, stairs and foyers to unusual wear a cushioning under the carpets has been found to add many years to their life. In addition to this practical advantage carpet cushioning gives a delightful sensation of richness and luxury which is important in creating a desirable atmosphere in the theatre. Carpet cushioning is a product made of finely combed, tufted vegetable fibre interlaced through a burlap backing or of animal hair felted under pressure. It is made in thicknesses varying from ¼ to ¾ of an inch. Carpet cushioning also has a bearing upon acoustics.

Chairs, Theatre

TO EQUIP a theatre properly, the first requirement is a thorough understanding of the uses to which the building is to be put. Having determined that, a seating diagram or layout should be made to insure the maximum seating capacity consistent with comfort, safety, facility of entrance and exit, compliance with local or state building requirements, proper sight lines, elevations and other mechanical adaptations and adjustments.

The arrangement and width of aisles and passageways should be such that transient patrons may move about with a minimum of disturbance to those who are seated. For this reason, the number of seats in each row between aisles should be kept as low as is possible and consistent with the desired seating capacity. It is well to have not more than ten or twelve seats in a row between each aisle, although this number may, if necessary, be increased slightly. Many theatres, however, have established a maximum of fourteen seats.

The distance between rows varies between 30 and 32 inches. Experience has demonstrated that this distance is necessary to accommodate all sizes of patrons, and to facilitate entering and leaving the center seats of a row while others are seated.

In planning the seats for a theatre, it is a safe policy to plan for the accommodation of persons who are above the average in size, since seating that is too large does not produce discomfort. In the larger theatres, therefore the majority of the seats are 20 inches wide with an occasional 19-inch chair to fill in. An exception to this ruling is the seating for loges, which frequently is as much as 24 inches wide.

Every patron is entitled to a direct and open vision of the stage. Sloping and terracing of floor and the curvatures of the balcony are, of course, intended to facilitate this, but unless the seats are specially made to meet the requirements of each and every part of the house, these avail but little. For so greatly do theatres vary in plan and design that the seating construction problem must be solved individually in each instance.

The relative length of chair legs, both front and back, must be so adjusted as to conform evenly to the slope of the floor and still keep the chair in its normal position. Then the occupant is assured of a natural, easy and comfortable position in sitting. He is neither tilted too far forward nor too far back. His feet and those of the chair should rest very naturally in exactly the same line or plane.

Where there are sloping sides toward the center, a two-fold problem presents itself. Not only must the inclination toward the front be right, but there must be a mechanical adjustment in the fastening of the seats to standards, so that the seats will be perfectly level and parallel with the natural floor level and the sitter will not be tilted at an angle.

The necessary converging of seats from the outer circumference toward the stage, both on the main floor and in the balconies, is another problem. There must be no loss of chair space and resultant decreased capacity, but the symmetry and a general pleasing and orderly appearance must be preserved.

The placing of chairs in rows and the arrangement of the aisles, to make ingress and egress as easy, speedy and safe as possible and to conform in every way with the building and fire ordinance of each community, is another important point requiring careful thought and planning.

Frequently, a very simple rearrangement makes possible an appreciable increase in house capacity, and if not in actual increased numerical capacity, actual increased box office receipts by transforming otherwise less desirable and less valuable seats to a higher grade of valuation and desirability.

Almost equally as important as proper arrangement of the chairs themselves, is the quality, comfort and service they will give. The element of comfort is an especially outstanding consideration as the ability to provide rest and ease for the audience during the performance augurs for more solid enjoyment of the show. Roominess, correct springs, smooth, well upholstered back, correctly placed arm rests, a perfectly level placing with the floor, serviceable hat holders, smoothly operating and noiseless seat-hinges—these are but a few of the things that go to make up a comfortable theatre chair.

Strength, stability, durability must be embodied in every chair. A broken seat, while apparently not of great importance in itself, is nevertheless an annoyance that reflects unfavorably on the theatre as a whole.

Talking pictures have injected another element into the problem of seating for higher efficiency, i. e., acoustics. The acoustical properties of the theatre chair are now very important, and for sound-equipped houses upholstered seats have become a necessity due to their sound-absorbent quality. Veneer backs and seats are likely to induce sound reverberation of obnoxious character and may easily mar an otherwise perfect acoustical condition. Therefore, in the selection of seating facilities, the subject of acoustics must now be given most serious consideration.

Chair Covers

IN ADDITION to giving a pleasing and inviting appearance to the auditorium, chair covers serve the practical purpose of coolness and sanitation. An interior otherwise drab may be transformed into a cool, clean, cheerful looking place through their use.

Theatre chair covers have been used extensively in dramatic and larger motion picture houses but it is only recently that by the smaller houses. No doubt one of ever, is not the case. Recently chair covers have been developed which are reversible, effecting an important saving in laundering costs. There are several things that should be borne in mind in connection with the use of chair covers. It should be remembered that auditorium and balcony chairs as a rule require two distinct and different styles of covers. The auditorium chair should be equipped with a cover which covers the entire chair back while the balcony chair need only have a quarter back. This is because of the slope on which balcony chairs are placed.

Working from blue prints provides the most satisfactory way of assuring a perfect fit of the cover for each chair.

Chair pads for veneer seats are also obtainable, and there are also special chair materials which are intended to be used as aids to acoustics.

Chair Fastening Cement

CEMENT of this kind is for firmly attaching into the floor the metal pieces to which the theatre chair is bolted. Into a hole made in the floor, the metal piece itself, or bolt for its attachment, is inserted, then around it is poured the melted cement. In about ten minutes this cement hardens and holds the metal piece or bolt firmly in place.

When used in reseating, the old metal piece or bolt is removed, a new one inserted and the cement poured around it. Such cement can be procured for around $7.50 per 12-pound can.

Chairs, Folding

THE FOLDING CHAIR, solidly constructed, plays an important role in the theatre today. With presentation and the stageband, and the need for compactness behind the scenes, the folding chair serves manifold purposes. The durability of this type of chair as made today adds to its value as a stage requisite. Many very small theatres likewise find the folding chair suitable owing to the frequent necessity of clearing the auditorium floor for other forms of entertainment. The folding chair combines neatness, durability and practicability.

Change Makers

SPEED AND ACCURACY are obtained at the box office through the use of coin changing machines which in addition to their time saving facilities offer a valuable protection against annoying mistakes in making change to patrons. With the coin changing machines a light touch at the keyboard is all that is necessary to deliver the correct number of coins to the patron who easily scoops them up from a cup at the side of the change maker. Coins may be delivered either from the right or left side and these automatic cashiers as developed for theatres have been improved in recent months until now they are available in sizes which occupy only about 81 square inches of space in the box office.

In the handling of crowds the coin changer plays a particularly important part in reducing to a minimum delay at the ticket window, and some are equipped with safety locks to prevent short changing when a channel is empty. Fumbling of coins and the dropping of them which is characteristic of the old fashioned method is eliminated.

Changeable Sign Letters

CHANGEABLE SIGN LETTERS are widely used by theatres in the marquee and have proved especially popular, because of the flexible manner in which they permit billing of a current or coming attraction. Changeable sign letters are generally made of cast aluminum with the letter part cut out. When used on the marquee these letters can be moved to make an attractive announcement. They are obtainable in large and small sizes and, in addition, numerals of the same character are also available.

Color Films

THERE HAVE been motion pictures in color for a number of years, but in 1929 was made the first feature picture entirely in color. This proved an added touch of realism to the sound picture, and at once color was incorporated in the production plans of most producers.

Most professional productions on standard film employ the process known as technicolor, a patented method consisting fundamentally in filtering out the blues, greens and reds in recording and superimposing them properly in printing. There are other processes less extensively used, including a two-color additive method.

A new process for amateur and semi-professional work was brought out in 1929 by the Eastman Kodak laboratories. Motion pictures in full natural colors in the 16-mm. size may be made by the use of Kodacolor film and by the addition of a Kodacolor filter to the lens hood of the camera. Provided the light is adequate, the process is no more difficult than making black and white pictures, and projection is accomplished simply by adding a Kodacolor filter to the projector. Minute lenses embossed right on the film cause the colors to register separately and thus do the trick. Since duplicates can not be made from Kodacolor film, the process is still impractical for theatre productions.

in some of the most elegant theatres, the new types of composition flooring, which is now made in raised sections and patterns suggestive of tile and other kinds of mineral flooring, have been effectively adopted.

Composition flooring is made by a number of companies specializing in this product, and all have their own processes. It may be said, however, that the basic materials are cork or rubber, and natural gums. For the coloring is added color pigments according to the design. The resulting mass is attached to burlap backing. Composition flooring comes in varying thicknesses, depending on the use to which it is to be put, and it may be especially designed.

Condensers

CONDENSERS are single glass lenses, unmounted. They are made in various diameters from 2¼ inches to 8 inches in diameter; the 4½ inches diameter and the 8 inches diameter being used mostly in motion picture work. The condenser is located in the front end of the lamphouse to gather the rays of light from the light source, and bend them, or condense them into a spot of light on the aperture. They are made in different shapes, some being Plano Convex some Meniscus or Moon shape and others Bi-Convex.

Condenser breakage and trouble has been greatly reduced through the perfection and development of heat resisting glass which is tempered and processed to withstand extreme changes of temperature. This, it is declared, has been accomplished without any sacrifice of light on the screen and without impairment of photographic values.

Focal lengths for motion picture work are usually 6½-7½-8½ and 9½ inches; 5 inches, 6 inches and 8 inches diameter condensers are usually used for spotlight projection.

Within the last two years there has been a development of what is known as the Parabolic condenser, which has made possible the gathering of more light, and a sharp, concentrated spot on the aperture of the picture machine. These Parabolic condensers have been developed for regular arc projection, high intensity arc projection, and mazda projection. They are a little more expensive than the regular type of condenser, but the results obtained are well worth the price. Prices from $1.50 to $12.

Cooling, Ventilating Systems

CAPABLE OF delivering 35,000 cubic feet of fresh air per minute into every part of the theatre, cooling and ventilating systems are being adopted by theatres of all sizes. Systems of this type are reasonably priced, ranging in cost from $100 upward.

They may be installed in various parts of the theatre, a common place being below the stage. Under this arrangement distribution of the air is upward, the air passing to the rear of the auditorium and dropping naturally to every seat. In theatres having an organ installed at one side of the proscenium the opposite side of the proscenium affords a good place for a cooling unit. A pent house on the roof at the rear of the auditorium, or on an elevated platform eight or nine feet above the stage floor level, are other manners in which the system may be installed to assure excellent results. In fact, regardless of the nature of the theatre, cooling and ventilating systems of this type may be readily adapted to it.

Manufacturers of this equipment maintain cooling and ventilating experts and offer a service of recommending the most efficient arrangement for the complete cooling and ventilating of a theatre. The systems may be installed without interruption to the regular performances.

Costumes and Costume Fabrics

COSTUMES and costume fabrics for the stage must meet many demands, and for that reason this is a specialized field. These fabrics must be of unusual textures for glittering display behind the footlights or in the spot. The costumes may represent a nation, a period or a class, and such costuming must be the work of a skilled costumer whose knowledge of peoples and periods is unlimited. The fine costume fabrics are both domestic and of foreign make. Costumes are made to order, sold outright, or provided on a rental basis.

Curtain Control Machines

FEW THINGS leave a nner impression on the theatre audience than the smooth and silent opening and closing of the curtain. This is accomplished by curtain control machines which operate automatically. The curtain can be controlled from the booth or from back stage by the simple process of pressing a button.

Curtain control equipment consists of track equipped with cable and snaps to which the curtain is fastened. In opening and closing the curtain may be stopped at any desired point across the stage and may also be reversed at will.

The motor for operating the curtain is usually placed on the stage or it may be placed in the grids or mounted on a platform. This permits the machine, track and curtains to be flied in addition to open from the center.

Theatres of all sizes are now employing automatic curtain control equipment and mechanism of this type has been developed to a high grade of efficiency, contributing immeasurably to audience enjoyment of the program. The price of curtain control machines is around $225 with the track selling at $3 per foot.

A type of curtain control machine specially designed for small theatres with tracks up to 40 feet in length, has been put on the market at a price considerably lower than that of the larger machines.

Curtain Tracks

THE TYPE of curtain track installed is important for several reasons. It cannot be a makeshift affair, for if it is it may ruin an otherwise good program. Naturally, it must be noiseless and must function smoothly and with little or no effort. A moving curtain attracts attention, therefore that motion must not be accompanied by vibration.

Cutout Machines

THIS IS A DEVICE for making various kinds of exploitation cutouts and lobby and marquise displays. The design for the desired cutout display is traced on ordinary wall board and with this device, the cutout is easily made by guiding the machine over the pattern. A small motor is used and the current from the electric light socket furnishes the power. The machine is convertible into a saw by substituting a saw blade for the chisel to handle harder and thicker materials.

Decorating Products and Service

THE THEATRE today has opened a new field for the producer and designer of decorative materials. No other building is as complete in this sense as is the theatre, for in the decorative scheme the theatre has found a factor which encourages patronage. The blending colors, the unique wall designs, the finely cut or moulded grille pieces, modern lighting fixture designs, gorgeous drapes, etc., all lend themselves to the theatre.

is accomplished through dimmers which are capable of complete illumination control making possible soft changes and color blending of lights to create a restful and pleasing atmosphere. Dimmers are used by small theatres as well as the large motion picture palaces. They are usually placed at the side of the stage. In instances of smaller installations the dimmer may be operated by the projectionist from the booth.

The magical effect of lighting control and blending as achieved with dimmers is one of the outstanding features of the modern theatre today. On the stage and throughout the theatre dimmers give producers and managers one of their most effective means of creating marvelous effects which unquestionably are important factors at the box office.

Disinfectants, Perfumed

THE NECESSITY of eliminating disagreeable odors in a theatre has led to the development of disinfectants which not only serve to eradicate the odors but leave in the room a delightful perfume fragrance. Disinfectants of this kind are usually sprinkled about the house or they may be used in ornamental cones, placed on the auditorium walls. Particularly during the hot weather months are perfumed disinfectants used extensively to sweeten the air in the theatre and make it agreeable and comfortable. Disinfectants sell for $3.00 a quart and up.

A deodorant which acts as a solvent for the scale forming in urinals and toilets, is also obtainable. It is designed to remove a principal cause of bad odor. Another deodorizing preparation on the market is especially adapted to use in mopping or scrubbing toilet rooms or other places which may be a source of obnoxious smells.

Drinking Fountains

EIGHTEEN drinking fountains about evenly divided between the wall and pedestal type are installed in Balaban & Katz's Uptown theatre, Chicago. While the Uptown is one of the country's largest houses, the drinking water facilities provided easily emphasize the importance of this feature in any theatre.

Drinking fountains should be placed as conveniently as possible for the patron entering and leaving the theatre. In small houses at either end of foyer is a place frequently used. Whether the wall or pedestal type fountain is used depends upon space available, the wall type being used where space conditions are more limited. The wall type is designed with special decorative and illuminating features.

In the finer theatres drinking fountains form an integral part of the decorative scheme of the theatre, being designed in harmony with the balance of the surroundings and in conformity with the architectural treatment of the house.

Earphones

EARPHONES consist of sound receivers attached to head bands and means for connection of the receivers to the main sound system of a theatre so that persons who are hard of hearing may hear the sounds of the picture as well as a normal person. These systems for the hard-of-hearing have made the talking picture as much of a source of entertainment to the person with impaired hearing as the silent picture was before, and through the device, the partially deaf person has been retained as a patron of the motion picture theatre.

The usual method is to have certain seats adapted for the attachment of this special equipment, and upon request the earphones are plugged into a seat, while the patron has control through a small hand "fader" of the volume.

Electric Measuring Instruments

THE DEVELOPMENT and improvement in theatre lighting and projection have thrown onto the shoulders of the electrician, as well as the projectionist, many responsibilities. At their command are factors which make or break the show. With enormous switchboards to control, emergency lighting plants, motors, generators, arcs, dimmers, transverters, magnetic appliances and many other involved and sensitive electrical instruments, it devolves on the theatre to provide adequate equipment for their correct operation. In the list of necessary measuring instruments are ammeters, voltmeters, vacuum tube testers and the like. All these and others tend toward improving lighting.

Electric Pickups

ELECTRIC PICKUPS take the sound vibrations from records, transmit them to the amplifiers. The stylus (or needle) runs in a groove on the record and is caused to vibrate according to the groove made at the recording. On the phonograph this needle vibrates a diaphragm located in the neck of the horn, and these vibrations are amplified to audibility by the construction of the horn. Electric pickups are used to convert the mechanical energy picked up from the record by the stylus, which also is the armature of the reproducing unit. A fluctuating audio-frequency voltage is generated in the coil surrounding this armature, which is amplified either through the audio-amplifier (of the radio set) or through the amplifier of a public address or sound picture system.

Equipment Supplies

THE IMPORTANCE of equipment to the theatre cannot be stressed too much. It makes for comfort, proper presentation of entertainment, safety, etc. Equipment must be given first consideration, for a theatre which does not install the finest and most effective product, and become at the outset attractive and efficient, is endangering its future success. Independent equipment dealers will be found in all key centers. (See complete list of Theatre Supply Dealers.)

Exit Light Signs

EXIT LIGHT SIGNS are required by law in all theatres, the Chicago theatre building ordinance specifying them as follows: "The word 'EXIT' shall appear in letters at least six inches high over the opening of every means of egress from a theatre and a red light shall be kept burning over such a sign."

Many improvements have been made in the manufacture of exit lights in an endeavor to make them less offensive in appearance without detracting from their practical mission. In addition to various styles, exit lights may be obtained built into ornamental fixtures, the whole being placed over the exit door.

Fans, Ventilating

FANS MAY BE divided into two classes, the portable and the stationary. The latter is the type commonly used in theatres. It is made in a variety of styles and sizes and is used for drawing into the auditorium fresh air or drawing out the foul air. These fans are mounted in a wall opening and in theatres can advantageously be placed in the front or rear of the auditorium and in the lobby. The motors operating these fans are usually supported by a bracket extension of the fan. The motor is generally enclosed to prevent trouble from dust or dirt.

The sizes of these fans range from 10 to 72 inches in diameter.

Ceiling fans are of a larger type and operate at slower speed. Fans of this type usually have four wooden blades and they are hung from the ceiling by an insulated hanger. The blower type of fan may be located over exits, under stage, at sides of projection booth and on roofs, either at front or rear.

While the importance of adequate ventilation in the auditorium is generally recognized it has been found that many theatres have failed in providing ventilation in lobbies. Air in the lobby, particularly when crowds are waiting admission soon becomes stagnant and foul, with the result that patrons are unduly wearied and placed in an unfavorable state for enjoying the entertainment.

WITH MOTION PICTURE presentations and local news reels offering novelty on many theatre bills, a great responsibility rests upon those developing and printing the films. Rapid service is required, yet the negatives and positives must be handled with meticulous care to avoid cloudiness, rain and other faults. Positives may be obtained in black and white and in several tints, including amber, red, etc.

Film Inspection Machines

PERFECT PROJECTION is impossible unless the film itself is in perfect mechanical condition. Today the public demands good screen and sound results and the projectionist can accomplish this only when proper inspection has been given to the film. The film inspection machines manufactured today are adding efficiency to this work.

Film, Raw

RAW FILM is motion picture film that has never been exposed. Camera spools carry 400 and 1,000 feet of negative film, and positive film can be got in 1,000-foot lengths. The positive film is that which is used to make a copy or print from the original film or negative.

Film Rewinders

THIS DEVICE is used for rewinding films after they are run through the projectors, and are made in two general patterns, the bench and fire-proof enclosed type. The bench or open rewind is made in one piece types with the dummy and geared end complete in one unit, and others are made so that they can be clamped to a bench or shelf, while some are permanently fastened by means of bolts. Some are made with plain bearings and some have their spindles mounted on ball bearings.

The enclosed rewinds are made in various patterns, both hand drive and motor drive models. The motor drive type is generally automatic in its operation, stopping at the end of the film or should the film break. Some are made with plain bearings and some have their spindles mounted on ball bearings. Some motor drive types also have multiple speed ranges and accommodate either one- or two-thousand-foot reels. One type recently brought on the market also has a detachable grinding and polishing attachment for aiding the operator in keeping his equipment in first class shape as well as keeping his arc lamp in good working order.

Fire Extinguishers

THERE ARE for theatres four types of fire extinguishers: the one quart size hand extinguisher, containing carbon tetra-chloride; the 2½-gallon soda and acid extinguisher; the 2½-gallon foam type, and the portable carbon Dioxide hand type. Good ones of these types are manufactured by many companies. Instructions from fire inspectors should be carefully followed in distributing these through the theatre building. Prices range around $12.00.

Fire Prevention for Projectors

IMPORTANT equipment has been developed which it is said definitely prevents a film fire in the projection machine. This equipment is a safety control device, that is easily installed and which is operated on the regular line voltage. The main control unit and dowser are mounted on the cone of the lamphouse and act as the main light cut off, taking the place of the regular dowser. The dowser is operated from five distinct points of contact, covering every avenue through which a fire could start in the projector while it is in operation or at a standstill with the film in it. All contact points are very sensitive, and the dowser is instantaneous in its action, yet does not depend upon springs to actuate it.

An arm with a loop and idler are so mounted as to engage with the upper film loop, another arm and idler is so mounted to engage the lower loop, an auxiliary idler is mounted so that it rides the film between the take-up sprocket and lower magazine valve rollers. These three points of contact with the film offer protection against fire from the following causes: film break at any point in the projector; loss of lower loop; loss of upper loop; mutilated perforations, i. e.: perforations in such condition that film will not ride properly through projector; failure of film to pass properly through projector from any cause; failure of film to take-up properly; bad reel in lower magazine; take-up belt breaking.

Now there are other avenues by which a film fire can start, and the inventors of the device have apparently overlooked nothing in the way of safety.

The entire projector is protected by a governor which is driven by one of the gears of the projector head, and this causes the dowser to actuate in case the following occurs: drive belts breaking, projector head binding up, motor trouble of any kind, loose drive pulleys, line fuses blowing out, projector running below normal speed.

A very important feature of this control is the change-over, this is incorporated in it where two or more projectors are used, and it is very simple in its operation as it keeps one dowser in a locked position while the other one is in operating position.

The failure of current supply to motor results in instant actuation of the dowser.

the theatre, such as the projection booth, stairwells, exits, dressing rooms, boiler rooms, etc. This demand on the part of the framers of the building codes has been beneficial to the theatre owner in many respects. In the first place it has effected a big saving in insurance. Secondly, and more important, it has safe-guarded life and eliminated legal battles and accident and death claims. Before building every theatre owner should consult building code specialists and the fire underwriters.

The list price of the shutters ranges from $9.00 up, depending on size.

Fireproof Units

THERE ARE various forms of these available and generally each type is made in several capacities and sizes to accommodate their installation in small or large booths. The component parts of each unit are generally detachable so that the unit can be made complete for film storage, waste disposal, film rewinding and inspection, as well as the storage of both supplies and tools. They are generally furnished with casters, so that they can be moved about for cleaning or relocating purposes. They are made entirely of metal and are therefore, fireproof. These units are far cheaper in the long run than the general makeshift of the past, in covering wooden benches or shelves with tin or sheet metal, since they always represent a recognized value by being complete within themselves, and not built in as part of the partitions or the booth construction. The prices range from $50.00 to $350.00.

Flashers, Signs

THE SPARKLING life and motion characteristic of so many theatre signs is produced by the use of sign flashers. Sign flashers are made in several types, among them being the motor driven, the mercury contact, thermal and socket flasher type.

The possibilities for attention getting effects through the use of sign flashers is demonstrated daily in thousands of signs equipped with them. Signs employing flashers are generally used in connection with colored lamps or color hoods, the combined flasher and color lending itself to an almost endless interpretation of interesting figures and shapes.

In addition to the interest compelling action which the sign flasher injects in a sign, it is stated that its use effects a saving in current cost over the continuous burning sign. Prices range from $40.00 up.

Flood Lights

FLOOD LIGHTING is accomplished with a lamp equipped with reflector of parabolic form capable of projecting a light to cover a wide area at a distance. For night lighting of theatre buildings lamps usually range from 200 to 1,500 watts. These may be located on the marquise or at some other vantage point opposite or nearly opposite the building. The intensity of the light is governed to a great extent by the type of reflector employed. In general, there are three types: the extensive, the distrubting and the concentrating. The former gives a wide smooth distribution of light for close-up work; the distributing reflectors provide a more concentrated beam for work at average distance and the concentrating reflector throws a long, narrow beam of light for illumination at long distances.

Claims advanced for the advantages of flood-lighting, aside from the obvious advertising value of this form of illumination, include a clean revelation of the architectural beauty of a building unmarred by signs or lamp outlines.

Furniture, Theatre

A NUMBER OF factors should guide the exhibitor in the selection of his furniture. Comfort and restfulness are among the first considerations. Upholstering materials offer a splendid opportunity for accents in the color scheme of the room. Over-elaborateness and that which breathes of the gaudy should generally be avoided.

All furniture depends upon the finish. A glassy varnish finish on any piece cheapens the quality of the framework. It scratches easily and shows dust more readily. A soft finish is always desirable, and this holds particularly true of gold furniture, which looks cheap unless nicely toned down.

Furniture for the men's room should always be of a heavy type, giving a manly and clubby appearance. Leather upholstering is quite proper. Women's rest room should be dainty and more genteel. Cane furniture is appropriate here.

ELECTRICAL FUSES are intentional weakened spots introduced into an electrical circuit and designed to fuse or "blow" due to excess current caused by overload or a short circuit in the line. Thus the circuit is opened before the excess current can damage any other part of the wiring or apparatus forming the circuit. They are purely a protective device and require replacement when the non-renewable type is used, or the renewal link replaced when the renewable type is used.

device because of their lower cost, their enclosed parts, and the absence of moving parts. It is good business to keep extra fuses or renewals on hand at all times. A sufficient supply will prevent a dark house. The theatre owner should not experiment on the use of fuses, but should take the advice of a skilled electrician so that an overload will not result.

Fuses may be more safely pulled than otherwise if a fuse puller is used. This device may prevent burns, injury to the equipment and other mishaps, and it costs but little.

Generators, Motor

THIS ELECTRICAL device is designed to produce direct current for the arc lamp on the projection machine, spotlights or double dissolving stereopticon. It consists of an alternating current motor, directly connected on a shaft to a direct current generator. Motor generators are made for every current requirement to deliver amperages from 20 amperes to 800 amperes.

There are 20 and 30 ampere outfits for reflecting arc lamps; 40, 60 and 80 ampere outfits for the ordinary arcs, and 80, 100, 150 ampere and larger generators for use with high intensity lamps.

Motor generators are made in two types, the series generators and the multiple arc generators.

The series arc is for use with two picture machine arcs. It is so designed that for the period of time needed to warm up the second picture machine arc, preparatory to changing from one picture machine to the other, it will carry both arc lamps at the same amperage without danger of losing the light on the arc lamp on the running picture machine.

Multiple arc generators are designed and built to generate direct current for many arcs. They are used in the motion picture booths where there are two arcs on the picture machines, one or more spotlights and a double dissolving stereopticon and effect machine. The multiple arc generator correctly built, will carry the entire battery of arc lamps and various amperages. The variance in amperages is controlled by the necessary rheostats.

Heating Systems

THERE ARE A number of types and arrangements of theatre heating systems, each designed to fit the individual building. One of the systems is known as the fuel-to-air method whereby the transmission of the heating effect from the fuel is obtained without the intermediate processes of transmission through piping and radiators. The volumes of outdoor air entering the system are heated quickly and uniformly, producing comfortable heating and invigorating ventilation in all seasons of the year. The heating units most generally used to warm the incoming air are commonly known as unit heat generators. More specifically, the operation of the warming and ventilating is as follows:

The air is drawn in through a fresh air shaft into the fan room, passing through air washers and being thoroughly washed and properly humidified. From there by means of large blowers, it is forced through the generator chambers and properly and scientifically distributed to the portions of the building to be heated and ventilated.

The system may be so arranged that, while the blower unit is in combination with the heater, it can be run independently and unrestricted by the heater for summer cooling.

The generators are so constructed that any kind of fuel, including oil or gas, can be used. The fires are controlled automatically by means of temperature control equipment, responding to thermostats placed in the theatre in various locations. Utmost flexibility is obtainable on account of the installation of these units or separate heat generators.

Equipment of this type is being used in every class of theatre from the 300-seat village playhouse to the 5,000-seat palatial home of the cinema art. On account of the exceptional flexibility, convenience, economy of operation, and perfect results obtained from the use of any kind of fuel, an owner obtains an up-to-date heating system as well as a properly designed ventilating plant for both winter and summer use. It is said that the installation cost is low and the operation is economical in such a system.

Heating Systems, Oil

HEATING BY MEANS of oil is growing rapidly in popularity among theatres. Some of the country's largest playhouses are installing oil heating systems of various makes and types. They are also to be found in smaller theatres. Among the advantages claimed for oil heating is the matter of cleanliness and subsequent savings in draperies and redecorating costs. The operation being automatic, the oil burner requires virtually no attention, effecting a saving in janitor service. Another advantage pointed out is the fact that oil burners give heat only when needed.

Most oil burners are operated in connection with a thermostat so that when the temperature falls even one degree below the desired point, the thermostat establishes connection which starts the burner again. When the temperature goes above the desired degree, the heat is automatically shut off.

Horn Lifts and Horn Towers

A HORN LIFT is an automatically controlled electric driven elevator used to raise and lower sound horns to their proper places behind the screen. They operate on the hydraulic, cable and drum and screw lift principle, and when the stage is needed for acts, the lift lowers the horn down under the stage. The portion of the stage flooring directly above the lift is attached to the lift, becoming a part of it, and any stage setup located over the lift goes up with it and is ready for use the instant the lift returns to the low level.

Horn towers are structural steel towers on which the horns are fastened. These towers are generally on rubber-tired, ball bearing casters so that they may be moved about silently to properly locate the horns behind the screen. When the horns are not in use the towers can be pushed out of the way.

Insurance

NO BUSINESS MAN today would risk his investment by operating his business without ample insurance. Insurance is obtainable for theatre buildings and equipment to the same extent that it may be procured for other types of establishments, and safety codes and modern methods of construction, installation and manufacture have permitted such a reduction in insurance rates covering exhibitors' risks that ample protection is within reach of any theatre enterprise. Besides the usual forms of insurance covering fire, accidents to employes and patrons, etc., there is rain insurance, which offers exhibitors protection against poor patronage due to storms rising suddenly before show time.

This type of insurance is now used universally to protect the operators of outdoor amusements and sports events, and the financial success of more and more indoor enterprises of this nature are thus being protected, also. When the picture has been bought, perhaps at a high price, and considerable money has been spent in advertising it, a sudden storm can mean a

Lamp Coloring

LAMP DIPS or lamp colorings are manufactured by numerous companies, and can be obtained in either the clear color or in a transluscent shade.

There are three types of coloring. One type is for a temporary dip where the color is to be changed often. For such changes, incidentally a color remover can be purchased.

The next type is the color used for dipping lamps which it is desired to color for permanent inside use. This color should not be used for outside lighting as it will not withstand the elements.

The third type is the outside coloring. This is for use on lamps used for lighting electric signs, marquises and other outside lighting. It is a very quickly drying color, taking from three to four minutes to dry. Lamp dip coloring sells for $1.50 per pint and up.

Lamps, Decorative

THE VARIOUS lamp manufacturers offer a number of decorative lamps. There are two types of flame shaped lamps used on fixtures with imitation candles and on standing candelabra. They are made in standard base and in candelabra or miniature base, and may be had in frost or sprayed colors—blue and red—flame tint —amber or canary.

Also considered as decorative lamps are the standard globular and pear shaped lamps, which are sprayed in colors as mentioned above.

Lamps, High Intensity

IT IS VERY encouraging, indeed, to note the many recent improvements in the high intensity lamp for moving picture projection.

With playhouses of ever increasing seating capacity and consequent increase of projection range or "throw," the high intensity lamp has rapidly become a necessity with very few alternatives for light source in the larger houses.

The high intensity lamp, just a few years ago, while considered a necessity in the larger houses, was also looked upon as a rather troublesome piece of apparatus to be gotten along with because there was nothing else that could serve its purpose. But today the high intensity lamp has been perfected in such measure that it is no longer troublesome or intricate from an operating standpoint, and gives satisfactory results.

Lamps, Incandescent, Projection

THIS TERM may be confusing as there are lamps for motion picture projection as well as lamps for spotlight, searchlight, floodlight, and stereopticon projection. Some are quite different, and each should be used in the service it is designed for.

There are two lamps made especially for theatre projection with professional apparatus. The 900 watt, 30 ampere, 30 volt lamp and the 600 watt, 20 ampere, 30 volt lamp. They cannot be used on the ordinary lighting circuit without a regulator or transformer to change the current to the correct amperage and voltage.

For portable projectors such as are generally classed as "amateur" there are several types of projection lamps in very wide use. There are the 50, 100 and 200 watt lamps for use on 115 volt circuits and the 200 and 250 watt, 50 volt lamps which are operated with a regulator.

All of these lamps are designed to project the most possible light on the screen. The 900 watt lamp produces enough light to work efficiently on throws up to 100 feet. The 600 watt lamp is used for throws shorter than 80 feet. The other lamps are for short throw work, generally with 16-mm. film.

Other lamps designed for spotlight service can be had in wattages of from 100 watts to 10,000 watts for use on 115 volt lines. The 100 and 200 watt sizes are all standard and are carried in stock. There is a standard lamp of 1,000 watts for use on 115 volt lines for motion picture projection. It is not, however, as efficient as the 30 volt type for motion picture work and is generally used for non-theatrical service.

Lamps, Mazda

THE USE of the Mazda lamp has broadened in recent years, and today these lamps are used in projectors in the theatres and on stages of the studios. It has been said, and perhaps rightly, that light sells the show. Especially is this true in the cities where scores of theatres are vying with each other for patronage. In the display signs, in the strip signs, in the marquise, in the lobby and in the theatre proper, the Mazda lamp has made the White Way, whether in the metropolitan centers or in the small towns, whiter. It is being used in the studio as well as theatre. Durable colored lamps may now be purchased with coloring on the inside, permitting the lamps to be washed.

Lamps, Reflector Arc

A CARBON arc lamp for motion picture projection using a reflector for projecting the light through the aperture of the picture machine.

The complete lamp contains as a part of the unit an automatic arc control adjusted to operate at a variance of a fraction of a volt at the arc. The advantage of the reflecting arc lamp is that it will operate at from 20 to 25 per cent of the electrical current necessary to operate the old style arc lamp. The carbons used are much smaller in size, making an additional saving. The reflector arc is now accepted as a necessity by progressive exhibitors, because, in addition to saving electric current, it produces a flat even field of bright crisp white light which is very desirable in motion picture projection.

Lenses

FOR MOTION PICTURE theatre service there are projection lenses and condensing lenses. The latter are also used in projection but are placed in the lamphouse and condense the rays to a spot on the aperture. Projection lenses are objective lenses placed in the projector head.

The prime requirement of a projection lens is to give a bright, well defined picture on the screen without any distortion or color rays. These lenses are made in four sizes: Eighth, quarter, half and three quarters (diameters, respectively, of 1 11/16, 1 5/16, 2 25/32 and 3¼ inches).

The one-eighth and one-quarter sizes are furnished in equivalent focii of two inches E. F., to eight inches E. F. The half-size is furnished in equivalent focii of four and a half inches E. F. to ten inches E. F., and the three-quarters in equivalent focii of from six inches E. F. to ten inches E. F. There is also procurable a bifocal projection lens with a range of from one-half to three-quarters of an inch in focal length, designed to eliminate the change of lenses in shifting operation from sound to silent films, and vice versa. All the sizes named are standard. Focal lengths are determined by the length size of the picture desired.

Lifts and Elevators for Orchestra, Organ, Stage and Horns

WITH THE ADVANCE in showmanship many new types of equipment have become factors in motion picture presentation and its supplementary entertainment. Not the least of these new factors are the lifts and elevators which play such an important part in the success of programs today. The modern theatre has this equipment.

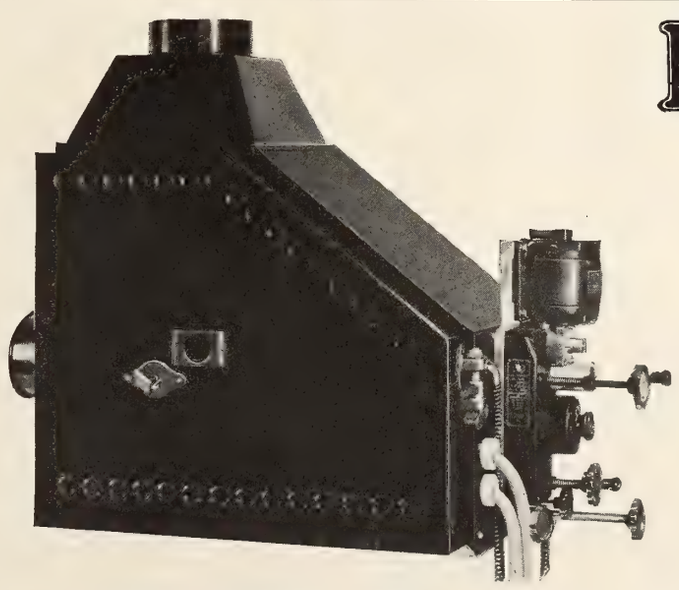
Lighting Control Equipment



THE MODERN theatre with a well balanced and effective lighting system, has made many demands on the manufacturers of lighting control equipment. Elaborate color effects must be possible and to change the lighting and gradually merge the light from one color to another without attracting the audiences a very flexible control system is required. Even the small control systems permit the operator to produce hundreds of color shades. Generally each color group has its own master control which is cross-interlocked with the ground master wheel device. Efficient control systems are available for every size house, no matter how small or how large.

Lighting and Power Plants

EMERGENCY lighting plants are equipment designed to furnish power for supplying illumination and operating the show in the event of a failure of the local power supply. It is said that the financial loss suffered by admissions returned by a theatre through only one power failure a year would more than compensate for the cost of equipment of this type. In addition to financial loss, a power failure during a performance frequently results in loss of life and property through the resultant panic.

Emergency lighting plants are made in several types such as the gasoline engine engine type, water turbine type, motor generator and battery type. In the case of the motor generator type several sources of power are provided to meet every contingency, which, together, form an interlocking type of protection.

The first source of power for the emergency lights of the theatre is the regular power supply, either from central station lines or from private generating plant. In the case of the private electric plant, if it is automatically operated, it can be so installed with an automatic transfer switch that the instant the regular supply of current fails, the private electric plant is automatically started. The electric plant then supplies the electrical needs of the theatre to the extent of its capacity. This it continues to do for as long as the regular supply is shut off. When this service is again resumed, the plant automatically stops.

The second source for the emergency, exit or hazard line circuits, is a special heavy duty glass jar storage battery, which is automatically kept charged by a motor generator set or rectifier. The capacity of the plant depends upon the total necessary load and the length of time protection is desired. The normal alternating current is fed through the transfer switch direct to the lighting lines and in the event of power failure, the batteries to the lighting lines. The batteries then supply the necessary power until the normal service is resumed, or until the batteries are discharged.

In some states the emergency, exit and hazard light circuits must be of a lower voltage than that of the normal power supply lines. In such cases, a transformer is used to step-down the supply line voltage to that of the emergency circuit voltage.

The third source of supply for the emergency circuits is the motor generator set itself. In case the A.C. transformer circuit, which normally feeds the 32-volt lights, should fail the motor generator set is operated from the main power supply line and connected to the emergency exit light circuits through its battery circuit. The battery will carry the lights only as long as necessary to start the motor generator set. After the motor generator is started the battery floats on the line.

The heavy-duty storage battery is kept continuously charged by means of a motor generator set, which is operated from the regular power lines, on an individual circuit separate from the emergency circuits.

ARE MADE in arc and incandescent types for use on stage—in the booth—in cove lighting, and for head spotting. Most spotlights on the market can be used for spot lighting and for full flood. The arc types are made in sizes of 3 ampere up to 150 ampere. They come complete with stand and attachment cord and connecter. Within the last year, the high intensity spot has appeared. It is an adaptation of the high intensity lamp to spot and flood lighting.

The incandescent spotlights are in sizes of from 250 watt to 2,000 watt. The sizes usually used are 250, 400, 500 and 1,000 watt.

The small head spots of 250 watts are used for cove lighting or spotting the head of a singer or organist. The incandescent spotlights come either with floor standard or pipe hangers for border lighting batons.

In stage work spotlights are frequently banked one above the other on a stand and used for flood-lighting from the wings. Prices range from $12 to $500.

Lithographers

THIS IS the show business. The one-sheet, three-sheet and 24-sheet are business pullers. They lend a splash to outdoor and lobby board advertising. In having special lithographic work done on special attractions theatre men generally prefer the block letter type because of the greater speed in production. In outstanding instances exhibitors have billed a show with 48 sheets. The cost of special lithographic work depends upon volume.

Block posters adapted from suitable designs are very striking and used extensively. One-sheets, three-sheets and six-sheets, used liberally both in and outside the lobby, and 24-sheets on billboards, provide the box office with a constant drawing power.

Lobby Display Frames

LOBBY ADVERTISING is an obviously effective business stimulant and in this connection the use of lobby display frames easily ranks first in importance. With the effective display frames now available it is possible not only to obtain a maximum advertising value from their use but also to add materially to the appearance of the lobby. The front of the theatre may now be "dressed up" in excellent fashion with these frames. In the case of new theatres it is common practice to design lobby frames in conformity with the architectural style of the house.

Artistic lobby display frames are now available which contain mirrors in the center with space for lithographs on either side. Or, display frames in the form of corner cases may be advantageously used. Literature on corner cases is visible from both the lobby and street sides. Lobby display frames of brass with finishes such as statuary bronze, verde antique, brushed brass, oxidized brass, gun metal, dull copper, have the advantage of requiring no polishing.

Overcrowding of the lobby with display frames produces a detrimental effect and for this reason it is necessary that good judgment and care be exercised not only in the selection of the frames but in their placing as well. Working from blue prints or an accurate diagram enables manufacturers to suggest effective and harmonious arrangements for equipping the lobby with a display frame scheme.

Luminous Paints

LUMINOUS PAINTS are being used more and more in theatrical production work. The sets and costumes may be so covered with this material that their coloring is different under different tones of light, or certain sections may be invisible altogether until acted upon by certain classes of light vibrations. A method which came into use during 1929 employs the ultra violet ray, acting upon certain fluorescent materials. These materials are substances, the atomic structure of which is such that instead of absorbing short wave lengths, they receive them and throw them back as longer waves, the colors of the waves (the colors beheld by the observer) depending on the wave lengths.

Music Publishers

APPRECIATING the important part played by music in the theatre several companies have recently compiled special music for the guidance and assistance of theatre organists and orchestras. Twelve compositions have already been issued by a company headed by Henry Waterson and it is planned by this organization to issue subsequent numbers at regular intervals for theatre orchestras. In this music and orchestral arrangement has been so scored that the numbers can be played with maximum effect by any combination of instruments, large and small.

Special books or organ music have also recently been available. These comprise classic, modern, characteristic, marches, opera selections and sacred numbers, making a valuable addition to every organist's library.

Music Stands

MUSIC STANDS are made in a number of styles, from those of simple design for smaller houses to more pretentious and ornamental ones for the elaborate theatres.

There are several very practical, up-to-date and attractive designs in music stands including the open, closed, semi-closed and resonant types. A popular open type is one in which ornamental bell-shaped lamp shades are placed one on each side of the music rack just above the level of the top of the music; this type is very practical for musicians on account of the unobstructed view it provides immediately over the top of the music sheet; its simple lines and attractive appearance are unusual and unique.

Of the closed type perhaps a popular kind is made in an elaborate design with lamps concealed above in the music sheet compartment.

Among the newest is the semi-closed type which has a solid rack of the open end design, with a 10-watt lamp concealed above the rack under a triangular shaped shade, or hood; this stand has also a flat table for the convenience of musicians. The new resonant type is of the closed design, having two 10-watt lamps concealed in the enclosure in which the music rack is placed; the resonator is below the music rack; this stand increases the volume and resonance of the orchestra and eliminates all pit light from about 90 per cent of the house. It gives the musicians better light with less wattage. Prices range from $15 to $75.

Manufacturers of music stands are also prepared to supply conductor stands to harmonize with the type of music stand used.

Organs

IT IS HARDLY necessary here to call attention to the ever growing importance of organ music in theatres. Next to the film and projection machines, the organ today is a recognized necessity and a proven box office attraction. Virtually every phase of the organ's place and use in theatres has been discussed in numerous articles in BETTER THEATRES.

Space here will not permit, nor is it desirable, that a lengthy discussion of organ and organ music be given. It is in order to call attention, however, to several facts in connection with organs that are of more or less recent development. One of these is the location of the organ grilles. While these have been conspicuous in the past, usually on either side of the stage opening a number of theatres are now placing the organ grille in the ceiling, directly in front of the center of the proscenium. At the Roxy theatre in New York the organ chambers are located beneath the stage.

Mounting the organ console on an elevator so that the organist may be brought into full view of the audience during a solo is another comparatively recent feature that is winning great vogue. Double consoles are now used in a number of theatres.

In the purchase of an organ the theatre owner should make sure that the instrument is built for theatre work.

In the main, aside from detail considerations, the important thing to bear in mind in the purchase of a theatre organ is whether or not the instrument is designed and built to meet theatre requirements. Demands upon an organ to be used in a theatre and in a church, for example, are obviously at variance. The result is that organs for theatres are built along exacting lines, expressly for the work they are intended to perform.

Organ Blowers

THE ORGAN BLOWER is an important piece of equipment, and is manufactured in sizes suitable for organs of all types. They may be obtained in units ranging from 1/6 h.p. to 75 h.p., which are multi-stage, multi-pressure machines. These machines are made so as to give the proper wind supply for the size organ for which it is desired.

Organ Chimes

THE THEATRE ORGAN, in the range of musical instruments which it reproduces, is orchestral in performance. Perhaps no musical instrument is as responsive to the human touch. Chimes, marimbas, harps, vibra-harps, celestes, xylophones, bells, glockenspiels—the range of instruments is limited only by the prices of the instrument installed. And each instrument must be as finely constructed as the instruments used by the orchestra.

Organ Heaters

REACTION upon organ music and the instrument itself of cold weather and dampness has led to the development of organ chamber heaters which keep the temperature in the chamber at a uniform degree, preventing loss of pitch, and deterioration of the organ. Electric heaters with thermostat control are used for this purpose. Organ chambers are usually tuned at a temperature of from 65 to 75 degrees. If the temperature is allowed to drop 10 degrees below the tuning temperature the metal pipes become flat by a quarter or half tone. A 10 degree rise above the tuning temperature will cause the same pipes to become sharp and further rise puts many of them out of pitch. The effect of dampness is to cause a swelling and consequent deterioration of wooden chests, pipes and other parts in the chambers.

Since organ chambers are not standard in size the amount of heating equipment must be determined for each chamber. The larger the chamber or the greater the area exposed outside walls, the larger must be the wattage of the heater installed. Heaters should be mounted near the bottom of exposed or outside wall so that rising warm air from heater will counteract the descending columns of chilled air. Thermostats should be located at the point the best circulation takes place and out of reach of direct heat from heaters.

Organ loft heaters may be so constructed as to deflect the heat back to the floor of the organ chamber, allowing the hot air to mushroom out before rising through the organ mechanism. This is accomplished by a hooded top.

In large theatres operating afternoon and evening heaters are usually left in operation 24 hours. In smaller houses they may be disconnected when the show is over and started again by simply throwing a switch when needed.

ORNAMENTAL fountains are invariably places of interest in the theatre. In addition to their decorative value they create a desirable atmosphere of coolness in the summer time through the sound of the trickling water as it falls into the base of the fountain.

Ornamental fountains may be obtained in many sizes and in many forms. The water pressure is supplied by a small pump operated from light socket current, the same water being used over again in most instances.

Perfumes and Perfumers

DISAGREEABLE odors are unfortunately a usual concomitant of crowds, particularly in such compact enclosures as the motion picture auditorium. These odors may be effectively eliminated by the use of highly aromatic perfumes, which are diffused throughout the air. One method of diffusion is the simple one of placing the perfume in decorative cones, resembling a vase, at various places along the walls. These cones are made of clay and readily absorb the perfume, which may be said to saturate the cones, and the odor radiates from the latter to quite a large area beyond.

Another widely used method is to spray the air with a perfume at suitable intervals.

A trifle less simple and perhaps more effective method is that of placing perfume in a disseminator located at the ventilating fan so that the evaporated liquid or solidified perfume will carry its fragrance through the auditorium along with the fresh air.

Prices vary from 50 cents for the vase-disseminators, to $2.50 for the ventilating system disseminators. A variety of odors are obtainable at from several dollars to $7.50 per pound.

Plumbing Fixtures

EVERY PART OF the theatre should be in keeping with the general architectural beauty of the theatre. Also, those parts of construction which are under cover of plaster and other exterior coverings must meet the requirements of building codes. The value of hidden fittings of high quality cannot be too strongly stressed as a factor in efficient and economical theatre operations. Included in these specifications are plumbing fixtures, both exposed and concealed.

Plumbing fixtures play an important part, both in the decorating scheme of a theatre and the cost of insurance. They should, therefore, be investigated by the theatre owner, remembering that they may be had in both white and in colors, and with various distinguishing sanitary features.

Portable Projectors

PORTABLE PROJECTORS are motion picture projection machines which are designed to be set up only temporarily and not for permanent installation in a regular theatre, as a rule, although used there. They are particularly adapted for use in schools, clubs, etc., and may be obtained for installation in connection with leading makes of sound equipment or with sound apparatus built in. There is a model with a heavy pedestal for permanent installation.

Semi-Portable projectors are standard motion picture machines which may be utilized for either temporary or permanent installations. That is to say, these machines, while sturdily constructed, are comparatively light in weight and may be moved from room to room or from one building to another. Specially designed carrying cases are also provided at slight additional cost for convenience in transporting for longer distances. For permanent installations, the model with the heavy pedestal no doubt has its advantages. Sound apparatus specially constructed for portable machines is available.

Programs

UNUSUAL PROGRESS has been made in the publication of theatre programs in the past few years. Today the program is one of the outstanding advertising mediums of the motion picture house. It goes into the home, where it is perused by the family.

In obtaining programs the exhibitor need only specify the names of the attractions and the dates. Within eight hours programs containing effective copy, suitably illustrated, are completed. This is possible through the efficiency of highly organized and ably manned printing plants devoted exclusively to this work. Copy provided in theatre programs carries a well balanced selling "punch" creating a desire to see the attractions. The programs are amply illustrated and complete facts concerning stars, players, author and other matters of interest are included.

In the dissemination of theatre programs many theatres have regular lists of patrons to whom programs are mailed each week while others distribute the programs to patrons as they leave the theatre.

Prominent concerns specializing in this work are:

CONSTRUCTION OF bigger and better theatres has developed a demand for a higher class of advertising. These colored program covers are highly artistic and colorful. In fact, the use of program covers has enabled exhibitors to attain a highly desirable individuality in this phase of their advertising. These program covers combine all the elements of a program announcement with the necessary distinctive features of a high class house organ. Prices range from $3 per thousand to $7 per thousand, depending on size of cover.

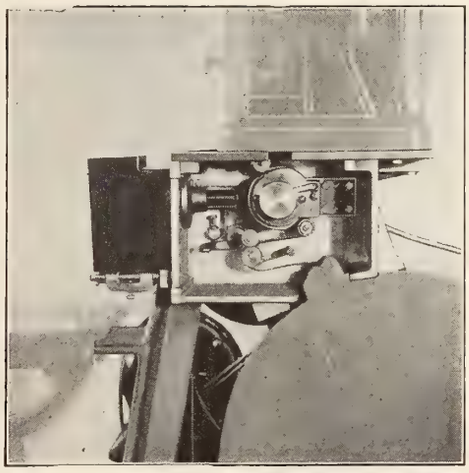
Projection Booths and Equipment

THE PROJECTION room, or booth, because of the fact that it is one of the nerve centers of the motion picture theatre, is becoming standardized. Not in size, naturally, but in general construction, and the high standard of equipment, etc. The projection booth, because of the very nature of the purpose it serves, must be fireproof and ideally ventilated. Though standardized in the general meaning of the word, the booth, in its placement, construction and equipment, should have individual treatment for each theatre. The skilled projection engineer should be consulted on this vital phase of motion picture presentation.

There are many things to keep in mind in the purchase of projection room equipment. Certain parts of this equipment must conform to the building codes, it must be practical, it must satisfy the projectionist and it must lend itself to better projection. It is wise in a majority of instances to consult a skilled projectionist before purchasing this equipment, for his knowledge of completeness and product is broad. The projection booth today is an efficiency room with an expert in charge, and the equipment purchaser should be selected with that in mind.



The design and layout of the projection room should have the careful attention of the architect or builder at the time the plans for the theatre are being prepared. The co-operation of projection machine manufacturers or their distributors can profitably be called into use in the planning of a projection room and in considering its equipment. A number of instances are known where the design of the projection room, relegated to last-minute consideration by the architect or owner, has necessitated expensive remodeling when it has been found that beams and other constructional features made proper projection impossible.

The desirable projection room may vary in size but to accommodate two projectors, it should be at least 15 feet by 10 feet, with 12 foot ceiling. This size will also care for a spotlight and slide dissolver. By all means should toilet facilities be provided and a shower bath is highly desirable.

For construction, a floor of 6 inch cement slab is recommended with 4 inch tile wall. Doors, windows and casings should be of steel. There should be two entrances to the booth. A room adjacent to the booth, at least 8 by 8 and well ventilated should be provided for the generator.

It is important that in the event of fire the flame or smoke be kept out of the auditorium and for this reason the aperature on the front wall of the booth should be lined with steel and fitted with steel covers

Projection Machines

PROJECTORS HERE referred to are the standard non-portable machines designed for permanent installation, usually in theatres. It is the expressed belief of theatre owners and projectionists that practically ideal projection is possible with equipment available at present, provided it is in the hands of a competent operator. Modern projection machines are the result of many years of improvement and development to meet the ever-growing requirements for the best possible screen results.

Noticeable in the latest developments are the efforts of the manufacturers to keep abreast of the exacting requirements for projection in conjunction with sound reproduction. A type of shutter designed to eliminate the heat from the film and to provide air currents tending to draw dust and dirt from the film, are among the latest developments.

All late model standard projectors are either constructed specially for sound picture projection or are readily adapted to any make or model of sound apparatus, either for sound-on-disc or sound-on-film. The latter method, due to greater thickness and density of film requires the use of much more amperage at the arc and this factor has been met with lamps and lamphouses of greater illuminative output capacity. Also the use of the perforated sound screen has to a very great extent added to the necessity of greater illumination. Moving picture projectors are now constructed more accurately and sturdily than ever before due to the more exacting requirements of talking picture projection and greater area of picture surfaces.

While thousands of dollars are frequently spent in many other departments of the theatre an apparent indifference to the importance of the best possible projection has been shown by too many theatre owners in the past. Fortunately, this attitude is undergoing a very marked change and projection is beginning to receive due attention.

The motion picture theatre, despite the many trimmings connected with its construction today, offers to the public as its chief attraction the film story on the screen. Even sound has not made clarity of image less important. That the projected image should be as bright and steady as it is possible to produce by modern machinery and engineering skill goes without saying.

One of the handicaps to the securing of proper projection in the past has been in the delay given this phase of the theatre at the time plans for the house are made. In a measure responsibility for this may be placed with the architect who, in his desire to create a palace of beauty and grandeur has apparently failed to consider that such facilities are without purpose unless the thing which the public pays its money to see—the picture on the screen—is of a quality to produce the highest type of entertainment.

It is not the desire nor the intention here to go into any technical details concerning projection machines. It is rather aimed in these columns to impress upon the exhibitor who is not already alive to the fact that projection in his theatre should have his keenest attention. The picture is the main attraction practically always and any skimping in its quality ultimately will be reflected in decreased receipts.

Projection Machine Parts

NO MACHINE is stronger or more efficient than its parts. Replacements in projection machines are a more important phase of showmanship today than ever before, with the constantly growing demands of both the industry and the public for the best possible projection of motion pictures. Concerns dealing in parts for projection machines have their experts and the wise exhibitor gets their opinion.

Projectors, Advertising

EXPLOITATION IN THE theatre lobby by means of an advertising projector using trailers from current or forthcoming attractions is a means of theatre publicity that is growing in popularity. Projectors for this purpose are available together with a trailer service. By means of recessing the screen daylight projection has been made possible. Continuous and automatic action is a feature of many of the advertising projectors now available.

The microphone picks up the words, and as electrical energy corresponding to the original sound waves, these "words" are carried through amplifiers to the speakers, where they are transformed into their original physical form as sound waves, only now of much greater intensity than when merely created by the human vocal mechanism. Public address systems are used principally in the theatre for announcements, though it is adaptable to many related purposes. Microphonic attachment may be made at several points in the system, making its function available to the manager in his office as well as backstage.

Publicity Clocks

THIS IS A DEVICE designed to produce revenue for the theatre by means of securing advertising from neighborhood merchants and shops. The publicity clock is placed in the projection room and projects the advertisement of a local merchant upon a circular face to either side of the proscenium arch. Upon this face are shown in silhouette the hours and hands of a clock. The clock shows the time and a new advertisement is projected upon its face every two minutes. Some manufacturers of the clock operate upon a basis of paying the theatre a certain amount of money for the privilege of installing the clock for one year in his theatre. They can obtain the advertising from the neighborhood stores. As the value of the advertising increases, the sum which the theatre obtains from the manufacturer increases.

Pulleys, Variable Speed

THIS EQUIPMENT is used in theatres for such purposes as driving ventilation fans. Because the proper audition of sound pictures requires the reduction of extraneous noises to a minimum, such drives are designed to operate quietly. Another desirable characteristic is an ability to operate without creation of heat. They are constructed for variable speeds so that the actual speed of the drive itself can be varied while the motive power remains constant.

Radium Paint

RADIUM PAINT is a substance which gives a spectacular effect to the stage when the house is darkened. Its application has been simplified, and it is used with frequency in the stageshows of the country's motion picture theatres. It may be obtained in different shades, and offers a colorful background for the show.

Recording

MOTION PICTURE sound recording is divided into two general types —recording on discs, and recording on film.

In modern electrical recording the sound is picked up by a sensational electrical microphone. The microphone sets up a weak current which pulsates with the vibrations of the sound being recorded. This current is amplified, filtered and again amplified to the strength necessary to operate the mechanism necessary to make the impressions on the wax records. By this system any number of different sounds can be picked up and the volume of each regulated to the desired volume.

In sound-on-film recording, the sound waves translated into electrical energy by the microphone, are further translated into light waves, which affect the emulsion of the film in the usual photographic manner, creating light and dark areas along one side of the film. These areas (depending in their form upon whether the light-valve or oscillograph method of light translation has been used) represent the original sound waves in their light correlatives.

THERE ARE VARIOUS types of these made, from the 10-inch, as used by film exchanges, to the accurately constructed type used on the projector machines. Some have machine embossed sides, wire welded sides, and still another type has die cast sides. Safes, Box Office

THIS IS A SAFE anchored inside the box office into which the cashier may drop silver coins and bills as received from patrons beyond what is needed for purposes of making change. This type of safe has been developed as a result of the many "stick-ups" of theatre box offices in which the robber has obtained receipts running into several thousand dollars. It is widely used in several other trades, the idea, in brief, being that with this type of safe in the box office a theatre is likely to lose only the amount which it is keeping exposed for making change.

Box office safes are made of steel and provided with a slot into which surplus receipts are placed as received, or are equipped with a chute through which the surplus receipts may be dropped. Safes of this type usually make possible the lowest rates of burglary insurance.

Schools

THEATRE MANAGEMENT and theatre organ playing are no longer hit-or-miss propositions. Both have become highly specialized. The theatre manager must be trained in administration duties, advertising and technics, and the organist must be able to dramatize the music to accompany the screen attractions. So valuable do chain organizations consider the trained man or woman that they are demanding those persons who have become skilled through graduate work in schools.

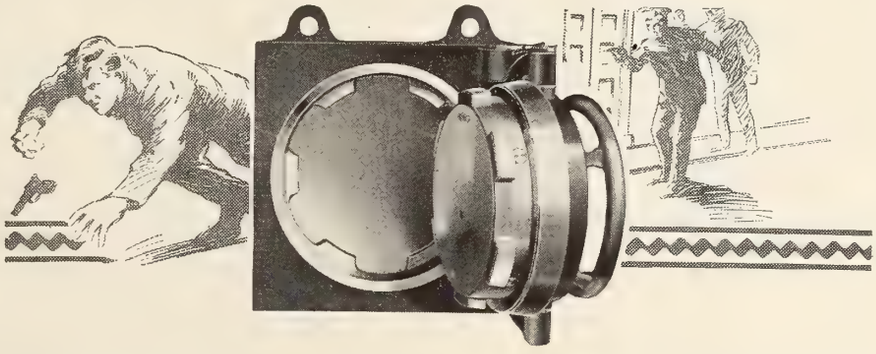
Screens



THERE ARE THREE types of screens for motion picture projection, metallic surfaced, white surfaced and beaded surfaced. Sound screens are perforated to permit the issuance of the sound waves from the horns behind.

The metallic surfaced screens are built in various finishes, from a smooth surface to a heavy pebbled surface. The smooth surfaced screen has perpendicular reflective characteristics, while the heavy pebbled surfaces somewhat diffuse the light. In wide houses, the best image is obtained on the latter type. Metallic surfaces, as a rule, are built to fit the requirements of each house.

Flat white or diffusing type screens in most cases are used with high intensity projection. Screen surfaces are made to meet the requirements of mazda, reflecting arc, regular arc and high intensity projection. Prices of screen range from 50 cents to $2 per square foot.

Screens for sound pictures are used with most sound apparatus. They differ from silent screens in that they are porous. When the horns are located behind the screen, a tightly woven canvas would retard or muffle the sound. These screens are perforated or otherwise made porous. Some are coated with a silver finish and are constructed to lace into a frame.

AFTER ALL, THE picture's the thing, and without stability and solidity of the screen frame the picture is being shown at a disadvantage to both theatre owner and projectionists, to say nothing of the patron. Billowing of the screen is a blow to good projection. Now, too, there is the added element of the steel frame as another form of equipment development.

Screen Masks

LARGER SCREENS HAVE come into rather general vogue recently, due to the elaborate type of productions now being produced which, with the use of special lenses have enabled theatres to present outstanding scenes with greater effect and scope. The many opportunities to use the full screen to give added value to important scenes have brought about the development of the screen modifier, or mask which, automatically operated, permits framing of the screen at any desired size. The screen modifier, or mask, was first used in connection with sound-on-film to compensate for the sound on the edge of the film. This equipment is now being used in many other ways, especially in achieving ingenious opportunities for titles, announcements and special trailers.

Signs, Directional

TAKE THE CASE OF a patron who comes from the auditorium and asks for directions. If the theatre owner has had this experience he realizes the embarrassment and other inconvenience. The patron is paying his way into the theatre and he deserves every consideration. The modern theatre today is equipping itself with the directional sign. Every business building is doing likewise.

Signs may be considered in two general groups—those that are illuminated and those which are etched on metal or wood without illumination. The illuminated signs, which are highly artistic in finish and construction, are made to read either from one side or both. The lettering in the signs is chipped into the glass and silvered, making it easy to read in daylight. The letters glow in a soft greenish color. Illumination is accomplished with 25-watt showcase lamps. Signs are fitted with lamps, cord and plug ready for attaching to light socket.

Signs—Electric

MOTION PICTURE theatres are leaders in the use of electrical advertising, the usual electric signs at some of the metropolitan houses being the most elaborate of their kind. Since the sign must necessarily be made with consideration for the size of the theatre facade and facilities for anchoring it, the matter is usually given individual consideration, and sketches prepared for the specific building to which the sign is to be fastened.

Signs, Marquise and Attraction Board

ELECTRIC ILLUMINATION is a bonanza to the program. Presenting the program in the marquise or in the attraction board is a box office asset. The electric presentation of a theatre and a program is an invaluable adjunct to the theatre attendance. Large and small theatres, today, are utilizing this type of promotional presentation to bring the people to their box offices. The theatre owner today must tell his public about his organ, his refrigeration and heating and the general comfort of his audience. In the marquise or in the attraction board this message can be presented to these people.

Slides

SLIDES ARE DIVIDED into four different classes: Song slides, advertising slides, announcement slides and special advertising slides. Song slides have come into vogue within the last few years. There are two types of these: The comedy type and the sentimental type. They are sold or rented in complete sets to be run in conjunction with organ solos. Advertising slides: These are of the stock advertising type in which may be inserted the name of the advertiser. There is a large selection for every line of business artistically drawn up and cleverly worded. Announcement slides: A standard stock selection makes it possible for the theatre man to buy already made any announcement that he desires to make. They can be secured in very artistic designs. Special advertising slides: Are those made from copy furnished by the advertiser from photographs, drawings or any other material the advertiser may have. In every case, they are made up specially. Prices for stock slides range from 25 cents up. Original slides cost from about a dollar, up.

Sound Equipment, Complete

MUSIC and sound reproducing devices are of two types, synchronous and non-synchronous. The latter use phonograph records, which are cued to the picture. The majority of these machines, which have from two to four discs for the records, are operated from the pit or other location in view of the screen. The synchronous type, however, is operated from the projection booth, employing disc records or film recordings made in conjunction with the picture. Non-synchronous instruments range in price from $275 up. The price range of synchronous equipment is quite wide, but may be said to be roughly from several hundred dollars to $10,000.

Non-synchronous equipment, however, has importance among motion picture theatre apparatus primarily as an augmentation of the synchronous sound equipment. The non-synchronous device is commonly installed along with the synchronous apparatus, in the same manner that public address systems are added to the regular sound layout. Incidental music not provided for in the regular screen program, and entertainment for the standees in the foyers, may be supplied by the non-synchronous equipment.

Among the developments in motion picture sound is the increase in the employment of the sound-on-film method of reproduction. Experiment has eradicated many of the disadvantages of this method and increased its advantages, and as a result one producer, long committed exclusively to the use of the sound-on-disc method of recording, has taken measures for the adoption of the film method also. Installation of both sound-on-disc and sound-on-film reproducing equipment is thus recommended by authorities for theatres which in the early days of sound might have been advised to economize by installing disc equipment only.

Sound-Proofing

WITH A GROWING tendency on the part of theatre owners to incorporate into the theatre building additional recreational features, such as bowling alleys and ballrooms, the matter of sound-proofing has become a subject of wide interest.

In a great many instances, it has been shown that modern methods of sound-proofing make it possible to place a ballroom or bowling alley room either directly above or directly under a theatre auditorium, with positive assurance that noise will not reach the auditorium and interfere with the audience enjoying the program.

Proper sound-proofing in such instances is an individual problem, due to the difference in building constructions, methods of ventilating, etc. The accomplishment is a matter of using proper design and materials based on years of successful installations. The system is based on proper breaking of solid contacts combined with proper absorbing mediums.

Hearing conditions in an auditorium can be provided for to a large extent in advance of construction from a study of the plans. Acoustical defects in existing auditoriums can also be diagnosed and corrective measures applied with satisfactory results.

Acoustic defects may be corrected by applying an efficient sound-absorbing material on walls or ceiling, as prescribed by a competent acoustical engineer. A number of efficient sound-absorbing materials are available, which may be elaborately decorated without reducing its efficiency.

In case a theatre auditorium is to be located in a large office building, the system can be used to prevent sound of pipe organs from penetrating to office spaces.

Speed Indicators

SPEED INDICATOR — an electrical device with an indicator which can be located in the booth, on the orchestra director's table and in the manager's office, with the meters or speedometers attached to the picture machine to register at what rate of speed the film is being run through the machine. It indicates feet per minute and also may show minutes per thousand feet. In modern theatres where the performances are run on a schedule with everything synchronized, speed indicators are a necessity. Prices range from $15 a unit, up. Generators extra.

Stage Scenery and Draperies

DRAPERIES ARE an important feature of theatres today. They accent color and give softness and richness to an interior. Architectural lines of doorways and archways are usually distinctively hard and draperies are the mediums by which these lines are softened to give a pleasing appearance. A drapery scheme usually creates an inviting, soft and colorful atmosphere. If the drapery is in harmony with the main color in the surroundings and in proportion to the richness of the architecture there need be little worry about it being too rich or elaborate. Likewise, scenery, colorful and delicate, has become an important adjunct to the motion picture theatre. Scenery to properly clothe the stage show must be of a type which is eye-catching the moment the drop is raised. Many specialists have been developed in this particular field. Acoustical treatment is also quite closely allied with draping for color effect and harmony. Up-to-date scenic specialists have made a close study of draping for acoustical correction, and today, of course, acoustics are an all-important consideration in stage and house drapery installations.

Statuary

ARTISTRY OF decoration in a theatre is reflected never more vividly and accurately than by the statuary. A dignified and beautiful statue at the head of the stairs leading to the mezzanine, for example, can establish the tone of a theatre almost as rapidly and conclusively as the construction.

Sweeping Compound

THERE are a number of these on the market, many of which are very efficient. They are made from a composition impregnated with oil so that in sweeping the theatre very little dust is raised. These compounds also have in them disinfecting material which disinfects the floor as it is swept.

They come in 75-lb. drums, 100 lb., 200-lb. and 300-lb. barrels.

Switchboards

CONTROL OF LIGHTING through the use of switchboards makes possible the wonderful lighting effects achieved in motion picture theatres today. Switchboards for this work are built in many capacities. Scenes for unusual lighting effects may be pre-selected by such a board and the theatre flooded with appropriate lighting scheme at a proper cue by the simple method of throwing a switch. Lighting control systems are being adopted by theatres of lesser size that heretofore have considered such installations as being only for the larger metropolitan houses.

Manufacturers of this type of equipment are glad to furnish engineering service and consult with exhibitors and architects on various phases of these lighting control systems.

A new device for automatic and pre-set control of stage and house lighting has recently been developed. The principle is very similar to that employed in the playing of pipe organ music and may be operated manually or automatically from the player roll. Novel and spectacular effects are thus produced with the possibility of synchronization with the program.

Temperature Control Apparatus

TEMPERATURE control apparatus are devices for automatically controlling the temperature of the auditorium, organ chambers or any part of the theatre where a uniform heat must be maintained. In a control for an auditorium the device is a small thermostat, which actuates a valve on an air-line, which in turn operates the shutters in the air ducts. In the average size theatre several of these will be located at various places and each will operate independently of the other, thus relieving hot or cold spots in any one section. Controls for organ chambers turn on or off electric heaters and also work on the thermostatic principle.

Tickets

THEATRE TICKETS are available and used in many forms as roll tickets, folded tickets, reserved seat tickets, and ticket coupon books. Roll and folded tickets of the more usual denominations are carried in stock. Tickets are commonly sold in even multiples of 10,000, the price decreasing with additional thousands ordered.

Tickets are made for use with ticket issuing machines and are consecutively numbered. This enables accurate check of tickets sold for each day. Stock tickets may be obtained for 50 cents a roll. Special printed roll or center hole folded tickets range in price from $8 for 10,000 to $158 for a million. The admission price must be printed on each ticket, by order of the government.

Ticket Booths

KEEPING PACE with advancement in theatre design the box office has been developed from a rather unsightly necessity to a thing of beauty, modernly equipped for speedy and accurate sale of tickets. It is usually designed in harmony with the architectural scheme of the theatre.

Attractive booths are made of plastic composition or wood. Others are made of cast brass or bronze with marble bases.

While larger theatres require several box offices one of these is always placed as near the sidewalk as possible. This procedure is usually followed where only one box office is used also, thus placing the ticket window within easy access.

Ticket Choppers

A MACHINE FOR punching tickets dropped in box as patron enters theatre. The ticket chopper guards against the resale of tickets. Mutilation of the ticket consists of perforations made on the ticket, which, however, is done in a manner that does not prevent accurately checking results. Ticket choppers are made in several wood and metal finishes, and are operated by electricity, or hand or hand and foot. Prices range from $75 to $250.

Tile (for Floors and Decoration)

IMPORTANCE OF first impressions has been repeated often enough, yet many a patron has drawn a negative reaction toward a beautiful theatre because insufficient attention has been paid to the appearance of the lobby. The usages of decorative tile in the theatre are many and valuable. Besides its use for fountains and purely decorative features, it is proved beautifying as well as durable as floor material in theatre lobbies, lounges, etc.

Towels, Paper

PROGRESSIVE OPERATION of a theatre does not stop at the screen or stage of the theatre. It extends even to the small details of equipment of the entire theatre. Paper towels are a factor of efficient equipment, but in this, as in all other phases of running a theatre, there are varying standards and values. The most successful theatre owner has the highest standards.

Trailers

THE EXHIBITOR has his screen for entertainment purposes, but it also is an invaluable asset in promotional work. Trailers are widely used and vary just as widely in style, depending, of course, upon the type of entertainment to be promoted. Trailers on feature pictures may be obtained on a weekly, monthly and yearly contract basis. Other trailers may be designed and produced for some special feature of the program. A great many theatres also have their own title trailer for the news reels, especially when several news reels are combined.

Uniforms

THEATRE PRESTIGE emphasized through the training of ushers, doormen and other attendants, is greatly enhanced by costumes worn by such employees.

Uniforms for Summer wear should be of a lightweight material to provide comfort and in addition, to create at atmosphere of coolness. Uniforms for the Winter months should be of a heavier material of a dark color.

Many theatres at present are making it a practice of equipping ushers, etc., in a style that harmonizes with the architecture of the house. For example, a theatre done in a Spanish style very frequently adopts a Spanish type of uniform for house employees.

Uniforms should be made to individual measurements to assure perfect fit and neatness at all times. Special catalogues are available containing appropriate suggestions for theatre attendants' uniforms.

Upholstery Material

USE OF sound absorbing upholstering on theatre seats has come into popular demand since the advent of sound pictures. A popular fabric used in this connection is mohair, which combines beauty with important sound properties. Upholstering material of this nature may be obtained in a variety of colors and executed in interesting patterns and designs. It is claimed for this material that it will not fade, does not mat down and can be kept fresh and clean with little effort. Use of mohair for upholstering is said to produce a marked elimination of reverberations in the theatre auditorium.

Usher Signal Systems

THE USHER SIGNAL SYSTEM provides a sending station at each aisle, equipped with numeral push buttons that give any total of seats that aisle might have. The usher registers on this station the number of vacant seats available, which information is transmitted to the floor or head usher, depending on the size of the theatre. In the larger houses the floor usher relays the information to the head usher. The head usher sends total of all aisles and floors to the doorman who directs the people to the different sections of the house where the vacant seats are waiting. This operation goes on continuously, and rapidly takes care of waiting crowds. The various stations can be furnished in any finish.

Seat indicators have proved to effect economy and safety in moving picture theatres by reducing the possibility of accidents in aisles and rows to its minimum, reducing the numbers of ushers used in handling patrons, together with speeding up the locating of vacant seats which are otherwise lost due to the inaccuracy of the human element manifested in the very best of ushering systems. The reduction of accidents means reduction in insurance premiums, and the reduction in the number of ushers means a reduction in uniforms, salaries and up-keep.

Vacuum Cleaning Equipment

THOUGH THE constant and careful cleaning of the interior of a theatre would seem to present a problem, the vacuum cleaner has simplified matters considerably, since it can be used in cleaning carpets, drapes, chairs, organ lofts, stage floors, etc. The vacuum cleaner also promotes sanitation, which old methods did not do. Vacuum cleaners are procurable for theatres of all sizes and are priced nominally when consideration is taken of their efficiency and labor saving.

Cleaners may be purchased for as low as $67.50.

Vending Machines and Scales

IN RECENT months BETTER THEATRES has inaugurated a department called "Added Income" designed to keep theatre owners informed of possibilities for extra revenue through the use of vending machines and other merchandising ideas.

One large circuit which has recently installed candy vending machines and weighing scales in some 600 theatres has made a careful analysis of possible revenue from such sources and reveal an expected income of between $400,000 and $500,000 annually. Their survey shows that an average of one out of every thirteen persons attending a theatre will patronize a vending machine. According to figures from various theatres, candy vending machines have produced from $50 per month upward, each. Many theatres have found room for three or more machines.

While candy machines are considered the largest revenue producers, it has been found that weighing scales located in rest rooms and other convenient spots run a close second. Weighing machines that take up a minimum amount of room, are attractively made in various colors and which can easily be moved on rollers are now offered especially for theatre use.

Vending machines of all types may be purchased outright or may be placed in theatres and operated on a percentage of the profits for the theatre. Other types of vending machines such as soap, towel, perfume, and the like, are beginning to make their appearance in some theatres. Pop corn machines, which are discussed elsewhere in this Index, offer another source of revenue under certain conditions.

Following are listed some manufacturers of candy vending machines and scales:

Ventilators

PROPER DISTRIBUTION of air in the theatre is an important feature of correct ventilation. One of the methods of achieving this is through the use of ventilators located in the auditorium floor. Air brought into the theatre is distributed in this manner to all parts of the house. Ventilators of this type which are generally known as mushroom ventilators, may be adjusted to permit the desired amount of air entering the auditorium. It is claimed that diffusers of this type enable an evenly distributed amount of air to reach all portions of the building. The prices range from 50c. to $1.50 each, depending on the diameter. A six-inch diameter is generally used.

Volume Controls, Auditorium

CONTROL OF SOUND and talking volume from a point in the auditorium so that the volume of sound will harmonize with the action of the picture is a recent development that is finding a favorable reception among theatre owners. The purpose of the auditorium volume control is to enable instantaneous change in sound volume, to enhance the mood of the particular scene at the moment it is shown. Heretofore, with the volume of sound controlled from the projection room, a flexibility has been absent, which has had a tendency to produce a monotony in the sound from the amplifiers, regardless of the action on the screen.

With the auditorium volume control, it is possible to tone and shade the sound directly at the point it is received by the audience, viz., in the auditorium.

Rights of Labor: Recent Court Decisions

City May Condemn Land

THE COURTS have consistently held that a municipality may legally, when acting within the provisions of the state constitution and state laws, condemn or purchase against the owner's will private property for amusement purposes. This is true although no money is available for such purposes and it is necessary to sell bonds to pay for the land. This well established point of the law was upheld by a higher United States court in the late case of Dalche V Board of Com'rs of Orleans, (49 F. [2d] 374).

In this case it was shown that a public official attempted to condemn certain private property which was intended to be used for public purposes. It was contended that the proceedings were illegal because it was necessary to issue bonds to pay for the condemned property. However, not withstanding this argument the higher court held the official legally within his right in condemning the land, and said:

"The state, through its proper agency, undoubtedly has the right, both under its police power for the protection of the citizens . . . . . and, by virtue of its sovereignty, can condemn and appropriate the property necessary for streets, parks, parkways, playgrounds, for amusement purposes, etc. For either purpose it could levy general taxes, within the limits of the state Constitution, to pay bonds or other obligations issued to that end."

Municipal Lease Void

GENERALLY SPEAKING, a lease given by a municipality on public property is void if it is shown that the property actually is needed by the city and no advertisement was published for bids.

For illustration, in West V Borough of Monmouth, (153 Atl. 495). it was shown that a person named West, without any advertisement for bids, offered to rent from a municipality certain property for amusement purposes for one season at a rental of $650. The offer was accompanied by a check for $325. The matter was submitted to the municipal council and it was voted that the offer be accepted and the municipal solicitor was authorized to draw up a contract covering the rental. Soon afterward the lessee took possession.

Subsequently litigation developed over the validity of the contract and it was shown that a state statute provides that municipalities may lease any part of any public property, not presently needed for the purpose for which it was acquired, and that any such letting shall be to the highest responsible bidder therefor. The letting thereof shall be advertised in some newspaper circulating in the municipality, at least ten days prior to the receipt of bids.

In view of the provisions of this law, although the municipality had accepted the above mentioned check for $325 in part payment on the rental contract and the lessee had taken possession of the premises, the higher court held the rental contract void, and said:

"The general rule is that authority must be conferred by statute to enable a municipality to lease lands held and used for public purposes. . . . . Considering the statutory provision further, it is likewise apparent that, in order to render the alleged lease or contract for rental valid, it was essential that the letting should have been advertised prior to the reception of bids, and the letting made to the highest responsible bidder. Nothing of the kind occurred in the present case. On the contrary, it appeared that there was no advertisement for bids. . . . . An attempted rental or a contract for rental of public property which is illegal because of failure of the municipality to observe and comply with such statutory prerequisites cannot be made legal and binding upon the municipality by part performance by both parties or by the payment by the alleged lessee and acceptance by the municipality of the consideration money or money for use and occupation of the property"

Mismanagement of Corporation

IT IS ESTABLISHED that any officer, director or other person, who willfully mismanages the business of a corporation is liable for losses resulting to the corporation. However, it is important to know that various courts have held that

PLANNING THE THEATRE

A SERVICE CONDUCTED BY PETER M. HULSKEN, A. I. A.

The Question:

WE HAVE been considering erecting a theatre on a lot 100 x 52 feet. We notice in BETTER THEATRES that you publish sketches of new theatres. Can you give us an idea of approximately what it would cost to erect a plain theatre? This theatre is not to have a balcony.

Also will you be able to furnish us with plans for a theatre of this type?—E. M. T.

The Answer:

SORRY TO STATE that it is against the rules of this department to furnish plans for a theatre. In past issues you will find some published sketches of good theatres from which you can obtain a very good idea of what you may want. Those sketches published are generally of theatres already built, which are described for the sole benefit of readers.

This department is only for the purpose of giving necessary data for prospective builders, but we always advise through our columns to consult a reputable theatre architect.

If I understand your interpretation of a plain theatre, I take it that no full stage is required, but just a small stage for screen and horn space without any rigging loft facilities. Such a building of that size could be built for around $30,000.

The Question:

WILL YOU please answer the following questions? I own a theatre which has a seating capacity of 700, with a stage 35 feet deep. The proscenium arch is 35 feet wide, and the auditorium has a width of 50 feet. In the front of the stage is an orchestra pit which extends about 14 feet beyond the curtain line, and the first row of seats is seven feet from the orchestra pit railing. I have no use for the stage as I run pictures only, and I have to increase my seating capacity.

All I really want is a platform with space for the horns. How would you proceed to extend the auditorium through the proscenium arch?

The stage has a rigging loft very high up. How many seats could I gain by eliminating the stage. I am inclined to remodel the theatre and carry out a modernistic design. I have seen many theatres in such a design, but am afraid to make my own decision as many people have told me that such decorations become very tiresome and that such a style is not going to remain long. What is your opinion? How large a projection screen should I use?

Awaiting your reply and with many thanks, I am—F. S. B.

NOTE:

IN THIS department Better Theatres will be glad to answer questions pertaining to the preliminary consideration involved in the planning of a new theatre or in the remodeling of an existing one. Only requests for ideas will be answered, since this department cannot assume the practical functions of an architect. All communications intended for this department should be addressed to "Better Theatres," 1790 Broadway, New York. They will be answered in this department. None will be answered by mail. Although only initials will be used in signing the questions published, it is a requirement that all letters bear the signature and address of their writers. The replies will be prepared personally by Mr. Hulsken, who is a practical architect and a member of the American Institute of Architects.

The Answer:

IT WILL not be very difficult to utilize your present stage for a part of the auditorium, but you will have to tear down the upper part of the stage and rigging loft to the height of the present side walls of your auditorium, so that you can remove the walls on each side of the proscenium arch, then extend the present roof over the stage. It may be necessary to install two new trusses, but they could be carried either on iron or concrete columns anchored to side walls.

The biggest problem will be the location of the boiler, fan and coal rooms, as in many instances they are located under the stage, and you understand the stage floor will have to be removed on account of the continuation of the auditorium floor. However, it may be possible to construct the boiler and fan room under the apron. It would be much better if you had the extra ground space back of the theatre to build entirely new boiler, fan and coal rooms outside of the building. You will need, of course, extra exit doors on each side of the stage on account of the increased seating capacity. You could gain approximately 380 seats, 20 inches center to center, and two feet, six inches back to back. I would advise you to make the screen as wide as possible, about 28 feet to 30 feet.

The Question:

I AM in a very bad predicament and I hope you will be able to help me out. I built a theatre about 18 years ago with a balcony seating 295 people. Of course I needed two fire escapes. As one side of the theatre was built on the lot line adjacent to a vacant lot, my architect obtained permission from the owner to let one fire escape project over his property.

At that time it looked as if when the time came that he would build a building on these premises we would be able to purchase enough land for exit space, while nothing was ever in writing pertaining to this agreement we understood that everything would be all right. Suddenly the owner died; now the executor of the will absolutely denies us the right to purchase exit space unless we buy the whole vacant lot, and he holds the price up to about three times its value. The exit door of the balcony is about 60 feet from the front of the building. Is there any way possible to construct a fire escape inside of the building. The front part of the theatre has the lobby in the center, and a storeroom on each side—G. M. G.

The Answer:

THERE IS not much reason for you to be alarmed about your predicament. The only mistake you made was not to have the agreement with the adjacent owner in writing and had agreed on a price for the purchase right of said exit space.

If you enter the balcony on each side to a cross-aisle from the mezzanine floor, and if the exit doors of the balcony open from this cross-aisle, as is usually the case in the majority of theatres, just move the stairs from the mezzanine far enough to leave space for reinforced concrete stairs of the width required by your state code. Run this stairway toward the front of your building and provide on top of this stairway (which could be cantilevered from the wall) a 9-foot concrete side wall with a 5-foot concrete deck. This in the majority of cases would take about four feet, six inches from the width of your house beyond the cross-aisle. Of course you will lose a few seats. You also will have to take off the same space from the storeroom and build a 9-foot concrete wall.

minority stockholders cannot enforce dissolution of a corporation, nor require appointment of a receiver, if the corporation is successfully managed, although mismanagement by its directors is substantially proved.

For instance, in Carey V Dalgarn Company, (130 So. 344), it was disclosed that certain stockholders in a corporation filed suit for an involuntary dissolution of the corporation and a liquidation. The principal ground on which the application was made was that the two directors and stockholders had grossly mismanaged the affairs of the corporation, had misused, misapplied, and dissipated the funds to such an extent as to jeopardize and endanger the rights and interests of all stockholders.

It was further alleged that the two directors had voted and paid themselves exorbitant salaries which were out of proportion to the services rendered and which were not justified by the work performed by them. Also, the stockholders who filed the suit complained because the president of the corporation charged the company the sum of $21,120 as a commission for services rendered the company in financing certain work performed under a contract.

Notwithstanding these pleas the higher court refused to order dissolution of the corporation, saying:

"It appears from the record and from what we have stated that the company has been successful from the very beginning, that it was perfectly solvent when this application was made and was a going concern. All of which shows in our opinion that the two directors left in charge, though they were father and son, were not subject to the accusation of bad management as a result of either incompetency or dishonesty. . . . . The appointing of a receiver to a healthy going corporation is calculated to affect injuriously its business and affairs; and such should not be done where the complaining party has other adequate remedies."

Advertiser Bound to Supply Copy

UNLESS a contract for advertising distinctly specifies that the advertising agency shall not obtain a copy of the advertisement from the advertiser, the latter is duty bound to supply such copy.

For example, in the late case of Parker Co. V Harris (132 So. 529), it was shown that an advertising medium failed to include a certain advertisement in its publication by the terms of a contract made with an advertiser.

The publishing company admitted that the advertising matter was not printed, but contended that the omission resulted from failure of the advertiser to furnish the "copy" therefor. The latter answered this contention by averring that it was understood that the salesman who took the order would prepare the advertising matter, and that this had been customary in the past.

However, in view of the fact that the contract did not distinctly specify that the publishing company should furnish the copy, the higher court held the latter not liable.

Validity of Printed Notice

THE COURTS have many times held that one who signs a contract will not be heard to say, when enforcement is sought, that he did not read it, or that he supposed it was different in its terms. However, this general rule is applicable when the neglect to read is not due to carelessness alone, but was induced by some stratagem, trick, or artifice on the part of the one seeking to enforce the contract.

For this reason various courts have held that a printed notice on a letter-head, or other contract, is not binding unless it is in bold type and plainly visible. Numerous old cases may be cited to substantiate this assertion. The latest higher court case on this subject is Publication Division V Bylenga, (236 N. W. 771).

The facts of this case are that a publishing company sent broadcast a letter, as follows:

"We are enclosing a clipping regarding your activity which we solicit authority to rewrite to conform with our style and method of presentation, publishing the same in future issues should you accept our offer for such special representation."

Enclosed was an ordinary letter-head having in a corner, boxed in by a black line and printed in small type, an offer to publish the advertisement in the directory for two years. Below, and where a communication on a letter-head would usually begin, was printed:

"The undersigned accepts your offer to prepare and publish a revised description of our activity to be made up from the following data: Classify under City of ——."

The advertiser signed this letter-head and mailed it to the publisher. Later a bill was received for $100 and the advertiser refused to pay it. The publisher filed suit. While admitting his signiture, the advertiser testified that he did not read the printing in the box in the upper right-hand corner; and that he supposed he was merely signing a consent that the publisher might publish the advertisement without charge. In holding the advertiser not required to pay the bill, the court said:

"The question presented is whether the communication sent to defendant (advertiser) was designedly prepared by the plaintiff in such a manner as to cause an ordinary business man to affix his signature in the place indicated for it without reading the boxed-in printed matter in the upper corner thereof. . . . . That there was no meeting of the minds of the parties as required to make a valid contract is apparent, and the stratagem resorted to by plaintiff (publishing company) to secure defendant's (advertiser's) signature relieves the defendant of the liability usually attaching to one who signs an instrument without ascertaining its true character."

Contracting to Remodel

ORDINARILY, no person is bound by any agreement not intended to affect him, unless the same is called to his attention and he agrees to the provisions. This rule of the law is applicable in lease, as well as all other contracts.

For illustration, in the late case of Howard P. Foley Company V Barnett, (154 Atl. 391), it was shown that the owner of a theatre building entered into a lease contract with a theatre operator which provided that the theatre building should be remodeled and fully equipped by the landlord. Later this agreement was modified by an agreement entered into by the theatre operator and the landlord which provided that, instead of the landlord furnishing all equipment, the theatre operator should "furnish the equipment to the theatre building to include the organ, projection machines, chairs, carpets, draperies, state equipment, electrical equipments to the theatre."

A building contractor and the landlord entered into a construction contract to alter the theatre building. Later the landlord refused to pay for the extra work performed by the contractor on the grounds that according to the lease contract the theatre operator was liable. However, the court held the landlord solely liable, saying:

"This modifying agreement reduced lessee's rent and contained other provisions we need not recite. In other words, defendant landlord) says that, inasmuch as this subsequent agreement turned over equipping of the theatre to lessee, plaintiff (contractor) should present its bill to that corporation. Without construing that agreement, it will suffice to say of it that, as it was not made known to plaintiff (contractor), and as plaintiff was not a party to it, it had no effect in relieving defendant of its financial obligations to plaintiff."

Validity of Payments

CONSIDERABLE controversy has existed from time to time whether a debtor is relieved from further payment on an account where the theatre owner accepts part payment by a check having written thereon "Payment in full."

This classification of the law is known as "accord and satisfaction" and means the debtor has disputed the account and that the creditor has accepted as full payment an amount less than the original debt.

For instance, if a debtor owes a theatre owner $100 and the former states that this amount is not correct, and later sends a check to the theatre owner for $50 explaining that the enclosed check "is full payment on the account," the debtor is relieved from making further payment if the theatre owner accepts and cashes the check.

On the other hand, if a debt is not disputed the debtor cannot settle in full the account by making payment of less than the full amount, although he marks the check "for full payment on account." The latest case involving these important points of the law is 295 Pac. 925.

In this case it was disclosed that a company owed an operator named Anderson the sum of $2,000. A check for $743 was drawn by the company payable to Anderson who cashed the check. Later the company contended that Anderson had accepted the check in full for all claims, and that this payment was a full and complete "accord and satisfaction."

However, since the company failed to prove that it had disputed Anderson's account, the court held that the payment of $743 may rightfully be credited to the account by Anderson, and that he was entitled to recover the balance from the company. This court stated important law, as follows:

"The company acknowledged in writing—the credit entry of $2,000 in the books of the company—its indebtedness to Anderson. There is not a sufficient showing that he accepted the $743 as other than a payment on account. The claim of indebtedness was liquidated and undisputed. The amount was agreed upon as $2,000. The payment of a less amount than the liquidated demand was not a discharge of the whole. Accord and satisfaction is founded on contract, and a consideration thereof is as necessary as for any other contract. One rule of law with reference to accord and satisfaction is that if a claim of indebtedness is liquidated and undisputed, and is due and owing, payment by the debtor and receipt by the creditor of any amount of money less than the whole amount of the indebtedness will not discharge the balance; and this is true, even though at the time of making the payment the debtor announced that he intended thereby to pay in full the entire indebtedness."

Duty to Maintain Repairs

IT IS THE DUTY of a theatre owner to maintain the floors and floor coverings in reasonably safe condition. Failure to do so may result in liability for injury to a patron.

For example, in Monroe, (34 S. W. [2d] 929), it was shown that a woman, while walking on a freshly oiled floor slipped and fell. She sued the proprietor to recover damages. Although it was contended that the woman was contributory negligent and failed to exercise care while walking on the floor, the higher Court held that she was entitled to recover damages, and said:

"Appellant (proprietor) had a right to oil the floor. It was not an insurer of appellee's (patron's) safety while using its floor. But, it was its duty, after oiling it, to use ordinary care, that is, that degree of care usually exercised by an ordinarily prudent person engaged in the same line of business, to maintain its floor in a reasonably safe condition for the use of its patrons while using it. . . . She had the right to walk on it and to assume that it was reasonably safe for her to do so, and, while so doing, to exercise ordinary care for her own safety."

Facade, Warner theatre, Torrington, Conn. Thomas W. Lamb, architect.

Duty to Invitees

THE MAJORITY of courts have held that a theatre owner is liable to persons invited on the premises, for injuries resulting from a dangerous condition existing on the premises of which the theatre owner knows and the invitee does not know. Also, the theatre owner is liable for injuries resulting from defective conditions of the premises unknown both to the invitee and himself, where the circumstances are such that the theatre owner could and would have known of the dangerous condition had he exercised reasonable care and foresight for the safety of those who might come upon his premises by his invitation, express or implied.

When attempting to prove negligence of a theatre owner an injured person may introduce direct or circumstantial testimony.

For illustration, in the recent case of Faulkinbury v. Shaw (39 S. W. [2d] 708), a patron sued to recover damages for an injury sustained when a sink broke loose from a wall and fell upon him. Although the lower court held the patron not entitled to a verdict, the higher court reversed the decision, and explained the law relating to invitees as follows:

"The owner of premises who knows of their unsafe condition is responsible for injuries occasioned thereby to an invitee who is ignorant of them, and who is injured while using due care for his own safety. . . . Negligence may be established by either direct or circumstantial evidence, or by both, and in this case from the circumstances proven, including that of the falling of the sink, the jury might have inferred negligence on the part of the appellee in hanging the sink to the wall."

Aggravation of Injury

FEW PERSONS realize that, in addition to ordinary compensation or damages allowable to an employe for injuries, the theatre owner is liable if he carelessly aggravates the injury, as by employing an incompetent physician.

Both in England and this country the law is established that an injured employe may recover compensation for an aggravation of his injury, resulting from negligence of his employer in giving or supplying poor medicinal or surgical treatment.

For instance, in the leading case of Stockwell v. Waymire (11 N. C. C. A. 760), it was held that where an injured employe, who had received an injury to an eye, had been treated by an incompetent physician—one not licensed to practice in the state—he was entitled to compensation for the loss of the eye through such improper treatment.

Assault by Detective

THE LAW is well established that although an employe is mistakenly accused or believed by a theatre owner to have committed a theft, the employe is not entitled to recover damages if he is secretly requested by his employer to come to a certain place for examination and questioning, and the employe does so willingly. On the other hand, any act on the part of a detective, or other representative of a theatre owner, by which a person is mistakenly accused of a crime and forced to remain in a particular place, is legal basis for damages.

For example, in the late case of Flora (35 S. W. [2d] 275), it was disclosed that a detective induced a person to go into a closed room. This person was retained against his will in this room for questioning for several hours regarding a theft. He sued the employer for damages, and the court held the person entitled to recover.

Postscript

Because of an omission in his article, "Playing Light on a Thermionic Organ," in the September 26th issue of Better Theatres, W. C. Fulton has asked that these credits be given:

The Severance Hall thermionic organ described in W. C. Fulton's article in the September 26th issue, was developed and constructed by Westinghouse engineers from detailed console designs and working models by Messrs. Dean Holden, I.E.S.; and C. W. Stedman, A.I.A., architects in the Walker & Weeks organization, who worked in consultation and with the valuable assistance of Professor Stanley R. McCandless, I.E.S. and A.I.A., of the Yale School of Drama, whose original conception of a portable and flexible lighting control was thus developed, augmented and arranged into this typical "Light Console."

Modern Seating and Chair Maintenance

theatre chairs has not overlooked the significance of the relation of the pitch or slant of the back of chairs to insure the correct line of vision from all parts of the theatre. This varies according to the location of each chair in the theatre, and the objective is to maintain correct and comfortable posture, together with correct line of vision.

The widths of aisles, together with the spacing between each row of chairs, while largely governed by local or state ordinance requirements, are frequently diminished in order to obtain capacity. This may not only be in violation of code, but more often is done at a great sacrifice to the comfort and safety of every patron of a theatre.

Upholstering Fabrics and Color Schemes

MUCH has been said about what constitutes the best upholstering fabric for use in covering the backs and seats of theatre chairs. Imitation leathers are largely used for the covering of the seats of theatre chairs. While more easily punctured than genuine leather, it will outwear leather and many fabrics for this particular use. It is made by coating a cotton fabric with a nitro-cellulose preparation, and the surface is embossed to imitate genuine leather.

Since the advent of talking pictures and refinements relating to acoustics, the backs of theatre chairs are covered with velours (jacquard or plain), or mohairs or other woven fabrics. The matter of price largely governs the selection, though some material will outwear others. In the selection of color schemes, both as to upholstering fabrics and the chair parts, a purchaser is frequently influenced by daylight appearance, rather than by consideration of the chair when placed in the dim and darkened theatre. It is not infrequent that gaudy, highly colored aisle chair standards are unseen when installed in the theatre, and in like fashion colorful fabrics lose their effectiveness when viewed in a dimly lighted theatre.

Acoustics

THE MODERN approach to the science of acoustics is from the standpoint of what the ear must hear to be satisfied, and what must be done in the theatre to obtain the conditions required. As related to the chairs, the audience in any theatre will comprise from 40% to 60% of the sound absorption, and if its quantity is variable, reverberation will fluctuate in amount with the changes in the size of the audience. A practical method of overcoming this variability is to use chairs, the seat and back of which have a high coefficient of absorption. Thus the upholstered type of seating, with, say, velour or woven fabrics, must usually replace the chairs of the ordinary ply-wood construction.

Chair Maintenance

EVERY occupant of a theatre chair, while engaged in witnessing a performance, though not always conscious of moving, is actually moving or changing positions in his chair. The crossing of legs, or moving from one side of the chair to the other, constantly diverts the weight of the occupant. This continued weave or motion by the occupant will react upon the floor fastenings or at points where the chair parts are secured together.

This constant weave, which is probably repeated several times daily to each chair, will eventually cause loose floor fastenings and assembly bolts, and not infrequently, injury as a result of this. While every precaution is taken by the manufacturers of seating product to stand such abuse, the only solution is a periodical attendance to the general maintenance of this important equipment.

The seat hinges of all theatre chairs, whether of the ball bearing, friction or cam operating type, are all mechanical in operation and require proper lubrication and occasional adjustment so as to operate properly. Unless periodical attention is given to this important part of the theatre chair, objectionable noises will emanate from this source, and they will be of constant annoyance to the patrons of the theatre, to say nothing of the constant wear that is going on at these points of contact.

While this outline is merely a bare skeleton of the many details that govern the construction and maintenance of theatre chairs, subsequent articles will dwell in detail upon each of the subjects mentioned, and in addition to this, a detailed account will be given of spring cushion seats for chairs, concrete floor construction and inclines, together with complete information on every factor that governs correct seating. We will likewise examine upholstered additions to installed chairs, and also endeavor to see what improvements can be made to seating now in use.

A new system of lighting, using luminous paint with an invisible ultra-violet light that activates the paint as the lights are turned low, so that the exits are clearly visible without having the harsh red lights that are generally used.

The curtains at the proscenium arch are of aluminum mesh in two colors, natural aluminum and black.

The entrance lobby, with white glass walls and warmly colored terrazzo floor, with metal doors and trim, with aluminum troughs having lights within, has been conceived in a bright and inviting wood.

The sign is placed so it can be easily seen and is designed to connect with the ticket booth, directing the entry with the least resistance. The booth is designed to be constructed of aluminum sheathing and glass.

The cost of remodeling the building, and for installing, and equipping this theatre, has been worked out so that a house of this size and type could operate at such an overhead as to give a sufficient return on the investment. Each item has been allowed for at a price that is prevalent in the large cities. It would vary in other localities as the cost of materials and labor vary. So far as such figures can be definitely given they are as follows:

Masonry

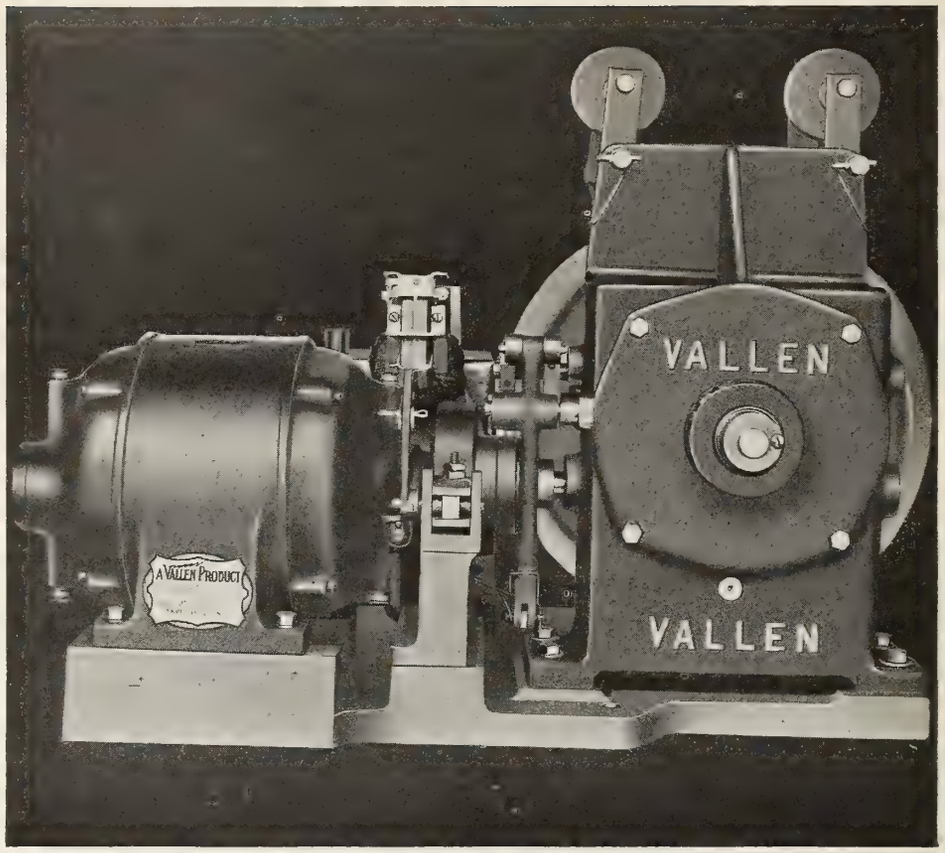
Brick and hollow tile work	$600.00
Structural steel	150.00
Painting (1,200 yards)	600.00
Ornamental Iron	650.00
Electrical work	700.00
Floors at $1 per sq. ft.	570.00
Heating and ventilating	1,300.00
Lobby Walls (vitrolite at $2 per sq. ft.)	2,320.00
Plumbing	520.00
Carpentry	1,300.00
Sheet metal ducts	1,000.00
Lath and Plastering (1,021 yards)	1,100.00
	$10,810.00
Original investment	$15,750.00
Alterations	10,810.00
Total cost	$26,560.00

Annual rental, 17%—$4,512.50.

These costs show that this kind of theatre can be built with an extremely small outlay of capital. And other things being equal, it therefore should be capable of showing a substantial profit. At least, there is no reason why a house of this general type, of modest proportions though it be, cannot have facilities as complete and as efficient as those of any picture palace. Its suitability in any instance must depend on factors not belonging to the physical theatre itself.

EQUIPMENT AFFAIRS

General Equipment News and Comment



MOVABLE SWITCHBOARD

● A semi-portable lighting control unit has been developed by Kliegl Brothers of New York, especially for use in theatres where space or costs make a large board out of the question. The manufacturers assert that although small, the switchboard has all the gradations of control found in a permanent board.

All but four circuits are controlled by dimmers—the four through circuits being reserved for direct service with switch control. Dimmer equipment consists of eight 250 slider type dimmers, and 12 round plate interlocking dimmers in three groups of four, with capacities of 750 to 1,500 watts, 1,000 to 2,000 watts, and 1,500 to 3,000 watts, respectively.

Each circuit is protected by fuses mounted in a fuse cabinet just under the connecting block. Short jumpers with plug terminals provide means for cross connecting any load to any switch and for obtaining any dimmer control desired—and interlocking group switches permit each set of four slider dimmers to be connected in series with one or other of the master dimmers.

The entire switchboard and dimmer arrangement is completely assembled on a structural steel frame and enclosed in a wooden case having a removable front, the whole being mounted on ball-bearing rubber-tired casters. When not in use the removable front of the case can be put in place to prevent tampering, in the absence of the attendant. A small drop door on the top can be left open making it unnecessary to remove any of the circuits from the plugging block, leaving equipment ready-set for use.

A new product of the Vallen Electrical Company of Akron, O.—the Aero-Speed curtain control. It can be provided for moving the curtain at a rate of 228 feet per minute, and a change of only two parts converts it from high-speed to low-speed, or any degree of speed. It is adaptable to movement in either a horizontal or vertical direction. The motor is 3-phase, 60 cycle, built into the design of the control.

ATTACHMENT CAP

● A new attachment cap with hand grip has been developed by Cutler-Hammer, Inc., of Milwaukee. It is made of resilient rubber with the blades fastened to a bakelite disc imbedded in the rubber base. The hand grip is narrow and slim, approximately 1¾ inches long, and has a decorative design moulded into the rubber.

Cutler-Hammer attachment cap.

The resiliency of the rubber is intended to act as a strain relief protection to the cord, as well as to protect the cord from breaking directly at the cord hole. It is rated at 15 amperes, 125 volts; and 10 amperes, 250 volts; and is available with openings for 11/32- and 13/32-inch cords.

SCREEN REFINISHER

● A fluid for cleaning and refinishing screens has been brought out by the Armstrong Studios of Los Angeles and Chicago. According to the announcement, the solution was severely tested with the result that if applied properly, it would not turn screens yellow and would not show streaks or laps. The screen can be treated without removing it from the frame.

Illumination for the Intimate Cinema

should stand out like a jewel as only light can make it.

Lobby display frames have been unlighted in the majority of cases, because of cost and because, if they were lighted at all, they were usually objectionably spotty. As a result, rather elaborate temporary cutout displays have been used with some lighting. However, satisfactory lighting may readily be incorporated in display frames. The effectiveness of a lighted display is many times greater than an unlighted one, and motion provides additional attraction value. Translucent "stills" may be used with much greater effect than at present. An accompanying photograph offers a suggestion for a lobby frame which uses light efficiently to attract as well as to display the posters, but with no poorly concealed glaring light sources. The use of mechanical changing poster displays is very effective and these may easily be built into the building front.

The Interior

BECAUSE of space limitations, it is often not possible to provide a foyer or lobby, the entrance being directly into the auditorium. If a foyer is provided, and especially if it is used for "standees," one of the many mobile-color lighting ideas is highly desirable. It harmonizes well with the other lighting treatment, as well as providing interest for the "standees."

The Auditorium

IN THE EARLIER little "movie" theatres, there was usually a lack of light. This resulted in at least two disadvantages: the difficulty of finding seats in the darkened auditorium, and the loss at the box office because parents were reluctant to allow their children to visit poorly-lighted auditoriums. It is important that a maximum amount of light be distributed properly to produce a cheerful and comfortable auditorium and still not show the movements of the patrons too distinctly, as distraction from the picture should be avoided.

The fixed small dimensions of this type of theatre apparently eliminate the use of hanging or projecting systems of illumination. These theatres are therefore susceptible to modern treatment where the light is built into coves, panels or other architectural features. In general, a flat non-glossy reflecting surface should be used for decorative purposes so as to prevent any undesirable reflections from the picture or the lighting equipment.

The intersections of the ceiling and side walls are farthest from the view of the patrons and afford an excellent place for illumination. Built-in panels provide some methods of lighting for this space. A further excellent method is to use the flexible, colorful and picturesque Colorama idea, with a very slow automatic color cycle so that one is not detracted by the change. In many cases the use of automatically dimmed colors is highly desirable, as it adds great interest to an otherwise very simple place.

Interesting effects may be created by the use of etched glass lighted from the edges. The etched design stands out, and when incorporated in panels or wall brackets, adds a very delicate touch.

For greater utility, built-in ceiling units may be added that throw the light directly downward. When properly masked they are not objectionable to people viewing the picture.

This new movement in theatre design and operation offers an interesting lighting comparison with theatres as they have become generally known. In the past, because of the size and elaborate character of the houses, a reticence regarding the new mode was exhibited. However, the success of these new developments promises to have a far-reaching effect on theatre design of all kinds. Light is a vital part of this new mode, so that more than ever will light be in evidence in the theatres of tomorrow.

Planning Today's Simplified Cinema

skimping on the more essential requirements must be avoided. Ornamental plaster practically unseen in the dim light of the theatre is of no comfort to the patron. Elaborate stencil work or hand-painted decorations are also commonly a waste of money. If the main form of the theatre is well proportioned, an indirect system of lighting can be used to create the right atmosphere. Simplicity in ceiling and wall treatment is restful to the patron and complimentary to the effect on the screen.

II

Actual Theatre: Capacity 300

THE FEASIBILITY of the 300-seat theatre depends on the policy of exhibition to obtain. Existing theatres of this size are now used for two policies, one very much different from the other. One class is the very exclusive and intimate cinema, where both American and foreign films are shown. Quite a feature is made out of a large lounging area where coffee or other drinks are usually served. The admission price at these houses run as high as 75c and a dollar. The other policy used in the 300-seat theatre is entirely different. Here a greater number of shows per day, and a very low admission price, produce the desired income.

A theatre that is now under construction in an existing 3-story commercial building on upper Broadway in New York City, is shown in accompanying plans. It will seat 300 people in the auditorium proper. It is entered from both an avenue and a side street, the building being on a corner. A very short flight of steps takes the patron from the avenue level to the theatre level. The downward pitch of the side street places the other entrance at street level. The theatre is placed between existing steel column supports of the building. The columns are spaced 26 feet apart along the width, and there is clear headroom of 13 feet under existing structural beams.

Rear projection, which is used by the small Trans-Lux theatres in New York, was at first proposed on account of the limited headroom, but by the use of the reversed floor slope, standard projection was made possible.

The usual long monotonous bank of seating has been broken up to make each chair more accessible and to obtain an intimate grouping. The side seats form an angular sightline to the screen between columns, instead of a straight line. A separate loge of 100 seats is placed in the rear, on a slightly higher level.

The Features of an Automatic Cinema

sidewalk directly over the equipment.

The entrance vestibule, pleasingly modernistic in design, has been treated with alternate strips of black and gray highly polished structural glass with chromium snap moulds over the joints. The base is individually illuminated. Automatic changing type bulletin frames, equipped with loud speakers that transmit talking advertising copy or non-synchronous music, are built into the sidewalls and front piers, and the front exit doors also have bulletin frames built within them, these being of the usual type. The ceiling of the entrance vestibule is indirectly illuminated over the entire area, above etched glass and chromium strips.

THE LOBBY is decorated in coral and silver, with one set of doors opening into each aisle. The lobby contains two candy dispensing machines, both modernistic in appearance. A penny scale is built into the wall, and there is also an automatic fountain incorporating a photo-cell mechanism.

Of interest, as well as of remunerative value, is a soft drink concession, which opens into the lobby and also outside, to the sidewalk.

Commodious lounge and toilet rooms are located on the mezzanine floor over the foyer, being reached by a small stair. In the lounge is located an automatic photo machine—which, according to the owners, practically paid for itself the first month. Automatic cigarette, and candy and perfume vending machines, and also candy dispensers incorporating tests of skill, are also located in these rooms. These machines were built into the walls and the designs made to conform to the surroundings. They have proven quite a popular feature, show substantial profits, and are not offensive or "nickleodeon" in appeal.

REPAIR—REPLACE NEWS

VOL. 1, NO. 2 NOVEMBER, 1931

REPLACE WITH SIMPLEX PROJECTORS

Good Projection Vitally Essential to Prosperity of M. P. Theatre

The picture to have the proper entertainment value, must be rock-steady, perfectly sharp in focus, with lines absolutely unblurred and its contrast values undamaged by shifting lights. Each succeeding film photograph must register with minute precision with the one directly preceding it over the projector aperture, and the screen itself must be evenly illuminated and also lighted with a brilliancy suited to the individual needs of the theatre concerned. Failure to comply with the above specifications results in an unsteady, blurred picture of no entertainment value—no matter how good the film—and the resultant falling off in b. o. receipts. GOOD PROJECTION MAKES ALL THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN FAILURE AND SUCCESS TO ANY PICTURE.

Projector manufacturers have expended thousands upon thousands of dollars, and years of experimental research in trying to perfect their methods of manufacturing parts. Measurements of ten-thousandths of an inch are now a regular part of shop routine, and this simply goes to show how infinitely accurate must be the registration of the projector at the time it is installed in a house. It only remains for the exhibitor to keep it up to the minute in repairs and additions which may be found necessary from time to time. EXHIBITORS MUST AWAKE TO THE ULTRA-IMPORTANT PART PROJECTION IS PLAYING IN THE LIFE OF THEIR THEATRES. THEY MUST REALIZE THAT THE PALTRY FEW DOLLARS THEY MAY SUCCEED IN SAVING ON THEIR PROJECTION REPAIR BILL WILL ASSUME UNRECOGNIZABLE PROPORTIONS AS COMPARED TO THE FALLING-OFF IN ATTENDANCE AS REGISTERED BY THE BOX-OFFICE REPORT. And they must realize that good projection is no longer a matter of speculation—but a 100% gold-bond investment, with the resultant profits bearing a distinct relation, comparatively, to the original sum invested.

Neglect a Grave Mistake

It is a grave mistake to neglect repairs on any machine and this is particularly true of the motion picture projector. The mechanism of the motion picture projector is designed to handle the inflammable and delicate film so that danger and damage may be avoided even at the excessive speed the projector is sometimes operated in some theatres. IT IS, HOWEVER, NECESSARY THAT THE MECHANISM BE KEPT IN EXCELLENT CONDITION AT ALL TIMES AS A DEFECTIVE PART IS BOUND TO EVENTUALLY CAUSE SERIOUS TROUBLE.

It has long been my belief that a "stitch in time saves nine," for a wear on one part starts up a chain of wear. AND IT IS REALLY THE HIGHEST FORM OF ECONOMY TO MAKE REPAIRS JUST AS SOON AS THERE IS ANY INDICATION THAT THEY ARE NEEDED. Where repairs can and should be made by our own projectionists we do the work, but under no circumstances are repairs made by us which should be made by the projector manufacturer or where replacement is really necessary. Care, experience, skill, loyalty and pride in their work on the part of the men and liberal expenditures by the management are needed, but they certainly pay in the long run.

HARRY RUBIN
Director of Projection, Publix Theatres

Three Projectors an Economy

I have always been an advocate for THREE PROJECTOR installations and think that every theatre, both large and small, should have three complete projectors in the projection room and all three should be in first class working condition at all times if possible. I say if possible because at some time no matter how careful you are one projector is liable to go bad and it should not be allowed to be out of commission any longer than is necessary to put it back in good condition again. I have had the occasion to repair one projector while keeping the show going alone on the other and we all know that this is not an easy task. With a THREE PROJECTOR installation it would have been but a short wait to take the film from the disabled projector and continue the show on the third, repairing the laid up projector at leisure and thereby doing a better job.

Then again IF YOU ALTERNATE ON THREE PROJECTORS YOU WILL LENGTHEN THE LIFE OF THEM ALL AND I BELIEVE THAT THREE PROJECTORS USED ALTERNATELY WILL BE OF SERVICE MORE THAN THREE TIMES LONGER THAN A TWO PROJECTOR INSTALLATION. I HAVE SEEN PROJECTORS USED UNTIL THEY WERE ALMOST READY TO FALL APART BEFORE THE MUCH NEEDED REPAIRS WERE MADE.

CHARLES H. TRAVIS

REPAIR WITH GENUINE SIMPLEX PARTS

Have You Studied the Safety of Your Projection Room?

Let us look over the projectors. 1918 Model and looking as though, as far as overhauling is concerned, they have been forgotten since that year. It's hardly necessary to look at them; just listen to them—every rattle tells a story. Gear teeth worn to a knife edge, bearings that have become literally egg-shaped instead of round, enough blacklash to allow nearly half a turn in the gear train without moving the film. The shutter gears so worn that it is impossible to project a picture without "travel ghost" and film guides that are worn to a wafer thickness. You ask, what has the sad mechanical condition of the projectors to do with safety? The answer is simple: A WORN PROJECTOR WILL LOCK AND JAM SIX TIMES AS OFTEN AS ONE IN GOOD REPAIR. Film is moved down through the projector mechanism by the teeth on the sprockets. If these teeth are worn down or the gearing which actuates the movement of the sprocket locks, it is evident that the film will sooner or later cease movement. Remember that the heat at the aperture is greater than the flash-point of the celluloid. If any part of that mechanism stops functioning for one-quarter of a second nothing more is necessary to start a fire. Where it may end is largely a matter of conjecture.

That "Over the Hill" exercises a strong emotional appeal with its old home sentiment was attested at the opening performance at the Roxy yesterday, when the audience broke into big applause on three occasions, and gave it a big hand at the conclusion. And weeps and sniffles all over the house.

IT'S IN BY A MILE, WITH OLD HOME HEART THROB STUFF AND SENTIMENT AND PATHOS THAT HAVE 'EM WEEPING AND APPLAUDING.

When you can get the women sniffling right through the pathetic sequences, and everybody applauding in a genuine demonstration at the close, as they did at the Roxy, then the picture is definitely in. Mae Marsh gives one of the outstanding performances of the year, a typical mother of a small town family slaving and worrying and making a fuss over her young brood, and in later life when adversity hits her, she gives one of the most touching and beautiful performances of a sweet old lady that probably has ever been screened. Henry King has done a fine bit of work, making every scene in the picture live and breathe with humanness, and never overplaying his hand. It hits some highly tense and dramatic moments, and in the scene where the hypocritical father gets his from the enraged son, the audience broke out several times in applause. James Dunn and Sally Eilers team beautifully. The rest of the cast is strong.

Cast: Mae Marsh, James Kirkwood, James Dunn, Sally Eilers, Joe Hachey, Tom Conlon, Julius Molnar, Marilyn Harris, Nancy Irish, Edward Crandall, Claire Maynard, Olin Howland, Eula Guy, Joan Peers, William Pawley.

Director, Henry King; Author, Will Carleton; Adaptors, Tom Barry; Jules Furthman; Dialoguers, same; Editor, Frank Hull; Cameraman, John Seitz; Recording Engineer, Eugene Grossman. Direction, excellent. Photography, fine.

AN EXAMINATION of several acres of press clippings reporting on exhibitor-to-the-public advertising, which engaged all of a recent rainy Sunday afternoon, brings us to the discovery that something in excess of 99 per cent of such effort in type is made on the assumption that the reader is already sold the motion picture as entertainment. The effort is almost never to sell the motion picture; it is always to sell a motion picture.

In the main this may be correct selling, but the opportunity for some vivid contrast of treatment is challenging.

The passing notion occurs that it might be worth while here and there for the exhibitor advertiser to give a thought to the fact that he has a vast deal of competition beyond the obvious competitors operating other amusement places. Also in these days of family budgeting and restricted expenditures it might help the motion picture to be set forth in the light of its value as something more than a time-killer. If there are vitamines of vigor in yeast, the smile of success in dentrifice, and culture in fifteen minutes a day with a five-foot shelf, what all might we not claim for an hour and a half a day in the healthy comfort of a well ventilated, clean and well appointed motion picture theatre? It is pretty obvious that the consistent patron of the motion picture theatre is likely to know more about this world we live in, and be better adjusted to it and its problems than the stay-at-homes, the chronic bridge players, golfers and pool shooters.

We hear a vast deal about the influence of the motion picture on the morals of young and old, and what it is charged with doing destructively. Mostly what is good to be said of the motion picture is left for the picture industry to say. That sort of expression always goes forth from the publicity offices of New York and Hollywood, and not from the local institution of the screen—the theatre.

For some years Mr. Will Hays has hopefully, but none too effectively, suggested to the industry that something be done on the screen for the screen. The talking motion picture talks for everybody else. Every movement for Sunshine-for-the-Eskimos, to the Save-the-Siamese-Cat drive asks aid from the motion picture and screen time. The screen presents but does not sell motion pictures.

Perhaps if some wee corner of the amusement page displays devoted to the selling of motion pictures could carry a word for the motion picture, not only the local enterprise but the whole industry might benefit.

"Some of the people all the time"

ANY reasonable observer will admit that the motion picture industry has in the main acted commercially and creatively considerably as though it expected to sell all of its pictures to all of the people all of the time. Mostly some films are sold to some of the people some of the time. Occasionally in the case of great hits the picture may be said to be sold to all of the people some of the time.

Bearing upon this and the more sensible aims of the picture makers, some of Mr. Will H. Hays' observations in a Hollywood outgiving are of special import, including:

"The entertainment demands of 100,000,000 people require that the screen reflect the whole gamut of human motive and emotion. The problem of the screen is not to find a common denominator of entertainment for every man, woman or child, but to create the largest possible variety of entertainment appeal. No book, picture or play can be all things to all men. There never has been and there never will be such unanimity of opinion. The objective of screen entertainment always will be the greatest service to the greatest number. This service is, of course, based primarily and always on accepted standards of good taste and morals. The recognition always of that necessity is the constant element in the service—otherwise it is a disservice.

"Such a program demands courageous pioneering in constantly new entertainment fields—pioneering not so much with themes as with treatments. Literature and life provide the eternal themes of human drama."

In other words, the motion picture job is done, if it pleases some of the people all of the time. Enough pictures on that basis will get all the people.

Our Growing Bookshelf

A TALL stack of volumes about, or impinging upon, the motion picture waiting on this desk for review reminds one that after all this industry is growing up. There is a very considerable library of motion picture lore now, bound between boards and called "books." Most of them are very bad indeed. They ought to be poor things anyway, because ninety per cent of them were written because somebody wanted to put over something. But no matter how weak and thin this increasingly extensive library of the screen is, it marks progress. In 1914 there were only two books in the world about the motion picture. One was Mr. Henry Vaux Hopwood's "Living Pictures," a discussion of film mechanics written about 1897, when the lore of the business was young indeed, and the late Dr. Hugo Munsterberg's "The Photoplay," presented with all his august Teutonic and Harvard dignity, despite the fact that mostly it was a mere rewrite of some notes for the Harvard Magazine by a graduate student, the now eminent Dr. Horace M. Kallen, psychologist, author and critic. Just now comes a flood of technical lore, and near technical lore, because sound has opened a new world of picture technology and engineering, and a considerable mess of "literature of evaluation" by persons who just will write anyway and choose to make the screen their victim. All this is, however, ever so much better for the screen than being ignored.

WHAT THE PRESS SAYS

HERO OF ARP

FRANK J. WILSTACH, who just dotes on the joy of the discovery of the amusing in the remotely obscure, comes up for air from among the papers to show that THE JOURNAL of TYLER in TEXAS purveys the story of the "greatest theatre fire in the history of the celebrated town of ARP," thus:

According to best estimates about $40,000 worth of merchandise and construction went up in smoke as the result of a fire which started with the explosion of a film in the operator's little compartment in the Chris Theatre about 11:30. The operator had just changed a film when a spurt of flame shot up and caught the celluloid.

The show management, of which J. Featherston was the general manager, had advertised a midnight matinee to begin at 11:30. It was the popular Will Rogers' latest release, "Young As You Feel." Oil workers had mingled with townfolk in buying tickets for the matinee, so the house was practically filled. Hardly had the show started when the fire broke out.

First reports had some 10 persons injured in the rush of the crowd to get out of the theatre, but a close check-up later revealed one woman had her ankle sprained. City Chief of Police Haire reached the scene before the crowd had time to get out. He yelled to file out orderly or he would refuse to let them out at the door. The threat had the desired result.

FROM OLD ISRAEL

THE OREGONIAN of PORTLAND has discovered a rare and choice case of juvenile murder which is traced in its inspiration to neither the press nor the screen, and rises with zest to make editorial comment, under the heading "Poor Little Killer," thus:

Newspapers and talkies must defend themselves continually against the charge of inflaming the mind of youth with their accounts of crime. But in the trial of 12-year-old Hubert Niccols the accusation fell elsewhere. The Oregonian's news account stated, quoting defense attorneys:

"Hubert delighted in stories of adventure, and in hearing his grandmother, Mrs. Marie Addington, read gory tales from the Old Testament."

We do not believe that indulging in Biblical stories of war and ravage caused the boy to shoot down the aging sheriff, but we are glad to welcome the Old Testament to the ranks of those standing for full and frank publicity. In fact, the Old Testament automatically becomes captain.

A BAS TABLOIDIA

THE DISPATCH of COLUMBUS in OHIO gets editorially quite warm on vaudeville and booking policies, on the provocation of thinking about "Ma Kennedy," in the following terms:

The vaudeville bookers have closed "Ma" Kennedy-Hudson's act, and, in the parlance of the variety halls, have set her trunks in the alley. All of which means that her act failed to draw at the box-office and there will be no more time for "Ma."

This is encouraging, because it indicates that vaudeville audiences are becoming fed up on attractions that have nothing whatever to recommend them but the notoriety of the actors. Heaven knows there are enough professional performers who have little or no talent or showmanship, but they at least do something to justify wasting the time of the audience.

If this heralds the end of pretty murderesses, high-priced mistresses, prize fighters, Niagara Falls shooters, "Peaches" Brownings and other denizens of Tabloidia in vaudeville, there is indeed reason to cheer. Vaudeville has given its stage over to these freaks long enough.

IS IT REALLY?

THE CHRONICLE of SAN FRANCISCO in its "safety valve" column carries a letter which brings up again that old problem of an adequate and satisfactory nomenclature to distinguish between the drama of the stage and the drama of the screen. The correspondent writes:

Editor The Chronicle—Sir: I have always objected to the expression "Legitimate theater" and more than ever since I read that Mae West and Earl Carroll have affixed the word "legitimate" to their performances. It seems to me that scores of first class screen productions better rate the adjective.

Why it is that out of 400,000 words in the English language experts should have chosen the one word for the spoken drama that infers all the art displayed in motion picture theaters is illegitimate I cannot understand. I think it's about time for the authorities to go into a huddle and find a better word to distinguish between theaters where actors appear in person and motion picture theaters. "Source" or "primary theater" might do. Maybe you can suggest a better.

FRED BARNES.

AMOEBA'S AMOURS

THE NEWS-TRIBUNE of WACO in TEXAS takes its pleasure editorially by spoofing the New York state education department's censorial attention to the current evolution film, as follows:

We regret to learn that the New York State Education Department has slipped in censoring the film, "The Mystery of Life," intended to represent the progress of evolution. The board very properly refused to permit the young person to be demoralized by seeing a picture of the mating of microscopic protozoa, but it slipped in, allowing pictures to be shown of babies without clothes.

A nurse weighing a naked baby. Horrors! What is the New York State Education Department thinking of? We not only regret, we are scandalized. It is a well known fact that the morals of the race cannot stand the sight of babies unless they wear long dresses. We trust the conscience of the nation will not stand idly by (we believe that it is the proper expression) while the New York State Education Department permits the exhibition of babies shamelessly crowing at the prospects of a bath.

HERALD STUDY OF DOUBLE BILLS BRINGS SWIFT REACTION IN TRADE

Resignations Pave Way for Removal of "Met" to Radio City

Resignation recently of Otto Kahn from the directorate of Metropolitan Opera Company, followed this week by those of George Eastman and Edward S. Harkness, eliminates from the board practically all opposition which to date has blocked removal of the Opera from its present antiquated headquarters in New York to more elaborate surroundings at the new opera house now being built in connection with Rockefeller's "Radio City."

Harkness, philanthropist and capitalist, and Eastman, of the film manufacturing corporation, are succeeded by Clarence Dillon, prominent banker, and Representative Robert L. Bacon.

Although "pressure of business" is given as reason for resignation of Eastman and Harkness, the direct cause can probably be attributed to their disapproval of a Radio City theatre as the opera company's headquarters, discussion of which has been the cause of much discussion in the Kahn-Harkness-Eastman group of Metropolitan backers.

They have been active for years in musical circle, Harkness as a benefactor of the Philharmonic Symphony Orchestra and Eastman through his benefactions to the Rochester Civic Orchestra. Their resignations follow closely upon that of Otto H. Kahn as chairman of the board.

Pathe Production Units Due on RKO Lot Dec. 10

Charles R. Rogers, vice-president in charge of production at RKO-Pathe, has instigated a production drive calculated to make it possible for his organization to move into their new quarters on the RKO lot between the 10th and 15th of December.

With four features in actual production, three others in the cutting rooms, and four more being readied for immediate production at the Hollywood lot when the move is completed, the co-ordinating of production facilities is said to have in no way interfered with filming progress.

With the signing of Ben Lyon to fill the role made vacant by the untimely death of Robert Williams, Constance Bennett and Director Edward H. Griffith are making up for lost time on "Lady With a Past."

Mexico Delays Film Tax

Tax levies on record and film importations of American companies into Mexico, decreed by the government in July, will not become effective April 21, 1932, Mexico City reports. The delay is to allow organization of the industry in Mexico.

Express Rates Cut

Culminating two years of effort on the part of the Hays organization in the direction of reduced freight rates on return film shipments, the Southeastern Express Company, Atlanta, Ga., will reduce rates substantially. The new schedule will probably go into effect on January 1. It is understood a 75 per cent reduction was asked. The Railway Express Agency has the same proposition under consideration.

RKO Stockholders' Tilt in Statu Quo

All's quiet along the battle lines in the minority stockholders' fight to block the proposed new $11,600,000 financing program for the combined Radio-Keith-Orpheum interests, which will be voted upon at a meeting in New York on December 10. RKO continues to receive daily hundreds of proxies favoring the plan submitted by RCA, according to B. B. Kahane, company legal chief, while from the camp of the minority antagonists the situation is described as in "statu quo."

Meanwhile, RKO continues with the work of amalgamating the physical properties of Radio and RKO Pathe. Reports of a government investigation of the merger were heard this week. Thomas J. Shanley has been retained by RKO stockholders' committee to analyze the firm's financial needs.

Steffes Asks County's Aid in Dime Show Fight

Al Steffes, Minneapolis exhibitor and Northwest Allied leader, has petitioned the county attorney for support in his efforts, and those of other independent exhibitors, to maintain a 10-cent price as late as 7:15 p. m., with suitable product.

Steffes asserts that the distributors and larger exhibitors, like Publix, are together in a move to force his Paradise theatre to take product at least six months old at an evening price of 10 cents. Steffes' appeal is similar to that of the Wisconsin Allied unit, which received a favorable report from the Wisconsin marketing commission.

Hays Office Cooperating To Eliminate Practice

Myers Calls Investigation of Problem "A Timely Service of Inestimable Value to the Industry"

Immediate and spirited reaction to Motion Picture Herald's study of the double featuring practice, completed in the issue of November 21, was registered this week in widely separated divisions of exhibition and distribution, emphasizing the seriousness of the policy and its consequences. The response followed publication of the first comprehensive study of double featuring ever to be presented to the industry, and apparently spurred exhibitor and distributor organizations to new efforts seeking control or elimination of the practice.

Foremost among the developments of the week was the assurance, given to Allied States Association, that the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America would cooperate with exhibitors and distributors in attempts to eliminate double featuring. Crystallizing of sentiment against the practice among a great preponderance of exhibitors and distributors led to the pledge of cooperation on the part of the Hays office.

Discussions Already Held

Preliminary discussions between major distributors and the Hays office already have been held and more are scheduled for the near future. An obstacle to complete elimination of the policy was encountered early in the discussions, during which it was revealed that several important circuits, controlled by producer-distributor organizations, favor regulating rather than abolishing the practice. In these instances, conflicting attitudes within single organizations were disclosed, with the sales executives of one major organization on record as opposed to double featuring and the theatre executives of the same organization fighting for retention of the policy in certain situations, while willing to eliminate or prohibit its introduction in others.

Numerous circuit and affiliated theatre executives, independent exhibitors and sales managers of national distributing organizations registered opposition to continuance of the policy. In addition, opinion among Allied States exhibitors in particular appeared so uniformly against the practice as to make opposition to it a matter amounting essentially to organization policy.

"Timely Service," Says Myers

Abram Myers, president and general counsel of Allied, this week commended Motion Picture Herald on its study of the double feature situation, describing it as "a timely service of inestimable value to the industry."

"Never before have I experienced such a decided reaction to trade paper endeavor," said Myers. "Obviously, the articles were

WILLIAM FOX, IN PATENT SUITS, ISSUES WARNING TO 100 CONCERNS

Infringements Charged To Four Companies

Erpi, Photophone, Paramount Publix, Radio Pictures Named in Double Print and Phonograph Cases

Launching what may prove to be the most important sound patent litigation yet known to the industry, William Fox has brought action on behalf of his American Tri-Ergon patent holding corporation against Erpi, RCA Photophone, Paramount Publix and RKO Radio Pictures, charging infringements of basic sound patents. In addition, more than 100 producers and distributors have been notified of probable infringement and asked to apply for Tri-Ergon licensing immediately or face legal action.

Possibility of later action against exhibitors and producers employing sound equipment of foreign manufacture not covered by American Tri-Ergon licensing agreements was also voiced at the offices of Hirsh, Newman, Reass & Becker, personal counsel to Fox.

Three Complaints Filed

Three complaints were filed at Wilmington, Delaware, by former Federal Judge Hugh M. Morris, as attorney for Fox, who played a prominent part in sound patent litigation several years ago. The Wilmington suits named Erpi, RCA Photophone and RKO Radio Pictures. Erpi and RCA were charged with infringement of the so-called fly wheel patent in utilizing certain improvements in devices for phonographs with linear phonogram carriers. An accounting of profits and permanent injunctions against both are asked in the complaints. Radio Pictures is charged with infringement of Tri-Ergon's double print patents, which cover developments of processes for producing combined sound and picture films. The complaint asks an accounting of profits and a temporary injunction.

The suit against Paramount Publix, filed in New York, is identical to that against Radio Pictures.

Must Defend Certain Licenses

Under the terms of the licensing contracts existing between Erpi and Paramount, on the one hand, and RCA Photophone and Radio Pictures on the other, Erpi is obliged to defend its licensee, Paramount, to the full extent of its investment in Erpi equipment, and RCA Photophone is obliged to do the same in behalf of Radio Pictures. Counsel for both manufacturers of sound equipment refused to reveal the extent to which they are liable for the defense of their licensees under the existing contracts.

Legal departments of both equipment manufacturers withheld comment on the Tri-Ergon actions pending the preparation of answers. The defendants are given 20 days in which to file a reply to the Tri-Ergon complaints.

The patents involved in the litigation cover the inventions of Hans Vogt, Joseph Massolle and Joseph Engl, all of Berlin, Germany. The inventors applied for American patent rights in 1912 and again in 1922, the Tri-Ergon complaints set forth. In 1924, the inventors assigned their rights to Tri-Ergon, Ltd., of St. Gall, Switzerland, which in turn sold the American rights to William Fox, in 1928. These rights were then vested with the American Tri-Ergon Corporation, which is headed by Fox.

Intimations that Fox, had he been so inclined, might have begun his Tri-Ergon patent actions considerably in advance of the present time were discounted by Ward, Crosby & Neal, New York patent attorneys, also retained by Fox. Representatives of the firm pointed out that Patent No. 1,825,598, covering the double print developments, has been contested by Dr. Lee DeForest for more than a year. Dr. DeForest's claim of interference with his patents was only recently overruled by the U. S. Patent Appeals Office, and until that time legal action based on that patent was not considered, according to the attorneys.

Sought Enforcement Two Years Ago

Attempts to enforce the Tri-Ergon fly wheel patents were made, it is claimed, two years ago. At that time, according to Fox's patent attorneys, various equipment manufacturers and producers were asked to procure Tri-Ergon licensing, and conferences and negotiations ensued which lasted more than a year. At the end of that time, it was said, notice of infringement was served on all parties concerned and legal action was considered by Fox one year ago. The DeForest claims of interference against the second patent were made at about that time, however, and as a result Tri-Ergon decided to await the decision of the Patents Apeals Office and, in the event the decision was favorable, to bring both actions simultaneously. Overruling of DeForest's claims last spring led to preparation of the actions.

Although Tri-Ergon's complaints specify no definite amount as being involved in a suit of recovery, they charge that, as a result of the alleged infringements, Tri-Ergon has suffered "great and irreparable loss, damage and injury" and is "deprived of great gains and profits." The complaints ask further that the defendants be required "to pay over to plaintiff all gains, profits and advantages earned or received."

Beating Depression!

Hollywood is finding some real cause for Thanksgiving this month, with 50 feature pictures in production at the film colony at the present moment, in addition to the numerous shorts which occupy many players. Thousands of extras are finding more or less lucrative employment, and depression, for the moment at least, is a word relegated to the background of Hollywood activity.

$1 Extra Dividend Voted by Loew's

An extra annual dividend of $1 a share on common was declared in addition to the regular quarterly of 75 cents at the annual stockholders meeting of Loew's and MGM this week.

Nicholas M. Schenck's administration of the theatre and film companies and Louis B. Mayer's handling of the studio were factors which permitted Loew's to pay a $4 dividend in a year marked by decreased earnings by a number of companies, it was brought out at the meeting over which J. Robert Rubin, vice president, presided.

Film Securities Corporation, holding corporation formed to take over Loew holdings, formerly owned by Fox, which subsequently were deposited by federal court action with a group of trustees, obtained representation on the board of Loew's with election of J. E. Searle, president, and E. W. Leake, secreretary-treasurer of the holding company. The third new director is former Judge J. R. Hazel of Buffalo, one of the trustees for the federal court. These new directors succeed Secretary Leopold Friedman, Daniel E. Pomeroy and H. M. Rice.

In reply to questions by stockholders, it was brought out that Schenck, in addition to a salary of $2,500 weekly, received a bonus last year of 2½ per cent of the net or $274,404; while David Bernstein, treasurer, received a salary of $2,000 weekly and a 1½ per cent bonus amounting to $164,642. Schenck received a salary of $1,500 weekly from Loew's and $1,000 from M-G-M and Bernstein $800 and $1,200 respectively from Loew's and M-G-M.

Bonuses received by these executives are fixed annualy and consist of a percentage of the net after charges, taxes and deduction of $2 a share on the outstanding stock of Loew's. They were established in 1926 by the late Marcus Loew, founder of the company.

Nicholas M. Schenck, in Kansas City this week, said that M-G-M plans reduction of negative costs, "for our own safety and not necessarily because of exhibitor demands." Schenck was on his way to the coast for production conferences when he made the statement. He said that negative costs will be discussed when he reaches Hollywood.

"We at all times maintain low overhead in keeping with the high standards of our business," said Schenck, "and at all times will reduce expenses in accordance with what is demanded by the best interests of all concerned."

NEW FACES—AND THE EXHIBITOR

Never So Great a Number of Potential Stars, But It's Up to Theatre Men to Build Them

BY LEO MEEHAN

There is an old cry in this business: "Give us new faces, new personalities in our pictures!" It is primarily a public demand, articulated and echoed to Hollywood by the critic, the film salesman and the exhibitor—particularly the latter.

In more than a decade during which I have lived in Hollywood, never have I seen a year during which producers have responded more generously or more successfully to this demand. There are a group of potential stars, or near-stars, here in the production community today who, in this writer's opinion can be developed into potent marquee names of greater popularity and box office pulling power than at any time within recent years.

It is trite but true that most of the important lessons we learn are through adversity. During the "golden age" of the silent days 'most anything or any person got by. People just "went to the movies" and took their entertainment—good, bad, indifferent—as it came. They had plenty of money, and motion pictures were the cheapest form of satisfactory amusement. Then they got choosey, and dissatisfied. Receipts fell off alarmingly. In the crisis which threatened came manna from heaven—the talkers. Again, anything that was a "talkie," or a "squawkie," got by while the novelty lasted. Again, the public gets choosey—and this time, also, hard up!

What now? Good pictures, of course. That has been and always will be true. But experiences of the past year indicate quite positively that names and personalities pull people into theatres before they ever know whether the pictures are good or not, and often whether they care or not. Who of us haven't heard it said: "Oh, I always go to see her pictures (or his pictures)!"

Very well, then; there is an acknowledged need of a constant flow of new talent and new personalities to satisfy the public. Production organizations comb the earth for them. Hundreds of thousands of feet of film are shot every year testing likely candidates. Those who look promising begin with small parts. If they "click" they are built up. Publicity departments swing into action. They get billing on the lithographs, on the credit titles. They land in the fan magazines, and in the press books.

But the fact remains that no matter how much a studio or a distributor 24-sheets a new personality, the job is less than half-done unless the exhibitor is sufficiently interested to supplement this campaign in his own community by calling attention to new people. And it would seem from this distance that the exhibitor would be building future profits for himself by helping in this building-up process. If he bills them in the lobby displays, sticks them into the lights when there is room, talks about them to patrons, uses their names and stories in newspaper and program publicity, he will importantly supplement the work of the producer in making these new names real box office draws.

Let's canvass a few of these new names which come to mind, whose performances have particularly impressed me.

The meteoric rise of James Dunn at Fox is one of the outstanding examples of the year. Coming from the New York stage, he has literally demolished the gates of Hollywood with triumphant performances in Bad Girl, Over the Hill, Sob Sister and Dance Team. Although identified with pictures for a much longer period, Sally Eilers really has come into prominence the past year as a box office attraction. Teamed with Dunn in Bad Girl, Over the Hill, and Dance Team she has achieved new and greater favor. Elissa Landi is another of the new faces at Fox who gives great promise. Her outstanding American pictures to date have been Yellow Ticket, Always Good-bye, and Body and Soul. Trained under rigorous European dramatic standards and with a gorgeous presence, she gives more than ordinary promise. Fox also is giving special attention this year to Linda Watkins, Conchita Montenegro and Helen Mack. Miss Montenegro appeared particularly to advantage in Cisco Kid, while Miss Watkins' outstanding work to date has been in Sob Sister and Good Sport. Her excellent work on the New York stage in June Moon won her a ticket to Hollywood.

Minna Gombell, long a wellknown figure on the stage, has crashed heavily in the films and now appears in every Fox production where a place can be found for her. She appeared first in Doctors' Wives, and subsequently in Bad Girl, Good Sport, Sob Sister, Stepping Sisters, Dance Team, and After Tomorrow. Miss Gombell is one of those rare finds, a clever comedienne.

Among the other men of promise at Fox are Hardie Albright, especially outstanding for his work in Heartbreak; John Arledge, who was particularly good in Daddy Long Legs; Paul Cavanaugh, Howard Phillips and Spencer Tracy. Tracy, especially, is already becoming a wellknown cinema figure, due to his excellent work in Six Cylinder Love, Quick Millions, and Up the River. Although notable for his comedy roles in the cinema, he achieved fame for his magnificent work on the stage as the lead in the tragic Last Mile.

The rapid rise to stardom of men like Edward G. Robinson and James Cagney under the Warner-First National banner is indicative of the possibilities of these new faces. This company is now starring Chic Sale, the "Specialist," who while he has been a stage favorite for years has never achieved any great prominence in films. Charles Butterworth is a highly promising comedian with Warners, too. Already he has worked successfully in Illicit, Side Show, Mad Genius, and Manhattan Parade. Real comics are always scarce. Among the women at Warners are their latest European importation, Lil Dagover, who has just made her first starring picture, The Woman from Monte Carlo, and Marian Marsh, a personable youngster who worked in Svengali, Mad Genius, and Five Star Final. Joan Blondell has been seen longer and is regarded highly by the First National organization. She has played in Night Nurse, Public Enemy, Blonde Crazy and currently in Union Depot. Smith and Dale, two of the famous Avon Comedy Four, are the latest Warner feature players and will be prominently exploited in Manhattan Parade, and Mendel, Inc. Warren William is another newcomer there who will be featured during the coming year.

Paramount is laying its heavy bets on Sylvia Sidney, Carole Lombard, Miriam Hopkins, Peggy Shannon, Judith Wood, Phillips Holmes, Gene Raymond, Charles Starrett, Russ Clark and Randolph Scott. Miss Sidney's most important assignment was in American Tragedy. She was loaned to United Artists for Street Scene. In both of these she made splendid records. Carole Lombard, who is Mrs. William Powell, is building up rapidly, her best work to date probably being in Man of the World. Miriam Hopkins, already a Broadway favorite, did an unforgettable job opposite Chevalier in Smiling Lieutenant. Peggy Shannon has registered attractively in Secret Call, Silence, Touchdown and one or two others. Judith Wood's first important role was in Vice Squad, and her best performance to date was in Working Girls, where she is particularly good.

Phillips Holmes is already scoring heavily across the country. Though now a Paramount player he scored heaviest in Columbia's Criminal Code. He has also played in American Tragedy, Stolen Heaven, and Man I Killed for Paramount. Charles Starrett appeared opposite Billie Dove in Age for Love and in Touchdown and Fast and Loose for Paramount. Gene Raymond (who was Raymond Guion on the stage) has already played in Personal Maid and Ladies of the Big House.

MGM did a fine thing in bringing the New York Theatre Guild's famous stars, Alfred Lunt and Lynn Fontanne, to the screen in The Guardsman. Helen Hayes is another Broadway favorite introduced to the cinema by this company. Her work in Sin of Madelon Claudet is outstanding. Robert Young is another young MGM player who registered importantly and for the first time in this production and is being groomed to play leads. Karen Morley and Madge Evans figure conspicuously as coming MGM stars, too. Miss Evans has appeared in Sporting Blood, Courage, Son of India and lately for United Artists in Greeks Had a Name for Them. Karen Morley is

FOX-RCA DEAL COOLS, LEAVING NON-THEATRICALS' FUTURE IN HAZE

Immediate Development of Field Held Up

Fox at Least Temporarily Halts Pioneering Work Pending Tentative Settlement of Royalty Problem

General economic conditions within the industry, and failure of Fox Film Corporation, leader in the non-theatrical movement, to find a solution which would reduce heavy sound royalty payments, have indefinitely postponed development of the non-theatrical market. With at least temporary cessation of activities by Fox and the inability of other companies to find in their working schedules the necessary time and finances for pioneering work, there apparently has been sounded, suddenly and dramatically, a death-knell to present and proposed widespread non-theatrical efforts.

The proposed deal between Fox and RCA for the acquisition of a Photophone non-theatrical license by Fox has cooled, and from present indications it will remain so, thereby shattering RCA Photophone's cherished hopes of winning to its fold much of the non-theatrical sound business of producer-distributor licensees of Western Electric. Several Erpi licensees are understood to have had in mind for some time a possible tie-up with RCA as a means of relief from the $500 per reel royalty fee levied by Erpi on non-theatrical and schoolroom releases.

With the termination of negotiations between Fox and RCA Photophone, on a non-theatrical license, Western Electric now holds the key to an immediate solution of present problems. Reports that Erpi eventually would capitulate to demands of Fox and other distributors for a lower scale were unofficially confirmed this week by an executive of Electrical Research, who admitted to Motion Picture Herald that officials of his company had been secretly conferring with a view to ironing out present Fox differences and establish a lower royalty payment for all companies who seek to continue in the Erpi fold with non-theatrical activities.

Fox, Erpi and RCA are the sole organizations to take seriously the pioneering work necessary to break open the field. Others have refrained because of economic conditions which compel them to concentrate on current affairs, which makes prohibitive at this time any further or additional business expansion entailing the outlay of sizeable sums and principally because they have no non-theatrical sound equipment to sell as have Fox and the two electrics.

When Fox sought six weeks ago to market its initial group of 50 schoolroom reels, Erpi decided that the reels were more for commercialization than for testing purposes and demanded that Fox pay $500 as a royalty to Erpi on each negative. Executives at Fox resented Erpi's demands, pointing out that development of the field was being held up by Erpi, and the electric in turn suggested to Fox that its executives submit to Western Electric a positive plan of development and include in it what they believed would represent a fair non-theatrical royalty.

At this point, unknown to Electrical Research, Fox executives quietly launched negotiations with RCA Photophone for the acquisition of a non-theatrical license, which RCA consented to issue on the basis of only $100 royalty for each negative reel. Papers were drawn but were not signed.

In the meantime, Fox has practically reached a stalemate on its elaborate non-theatrical plans.

In suggesting the waiving of royalties Fox executives point out that paying them would place a severe handicap on each reel undertaken, and should be waived until the field has been placed on a paying basis, at which time all parties will have obtained a better grasp of the possibilities offered, and will be in a position to better gauge a fee in keeping with the size of the market. The $500 royalty was arrived at through the fact that the regular theatrical license stipulates $500, and it was frankly admitted at Erpi that a change has not been made only because no one as yet has been able to gauge the size of the proposed market.

As the situation now stands, Fox, Erpi and RCA Photophone, leaders in the non-theatrical movement, each have adopted a policy of "watchful waiting," which, it is believed, will continue until Erpi lowers its royalty demands, and until some one advances a workable plan of providing the market with schoolroom and non-theatrical product, establishing libraries in key cities. Just who this some one will be is evidently a mystery. One Erpi official indicated that the opening shot will not come from within the industry, but from the educational field itself. A non-partisan group, it is understood, will be formed to build up the market, after which all motion picture companies will be invited to submit product.

At RCA Photophone headquarters in New York, E. E. Reoch, executive vice-president, refused to discuss the situation, or the proposed contract with Fox. "Any statement must come from Fox," he said.

At Fox and Electrical Research offices, executives refused to discuss the situation—officially.

Ennis Now Ad Chief

Bert Ennis, publicist, newspaperman and magazine writer of note, this week assumed duties of advertising-publicity and exploitation director at Columbia's home office in New York. Ennis, who has been handling publicity and exploitation for Columbia since July, succeeds Al Selig.

A member of the school of pioneers in motion pictures, Ennis first worked for Vitagraph and then handled exclusively the press relations of many former noted stars and show personalities, among them the late Barbara La Marr. Ennis joined the Chanin Brothers, builders of the Roxy and other New York theatres, and wrote Broadway columns long before the Winchells and Hellingers. He has contributed to many leading magazines and periodicals and for a considerable time has been actively associated in furthering the progress of the Catholic Film Guild.

Houses Like Studio In 50 Other Cities

Small automatic theatres like the Studio in Hollywood, will be established in 50 other cities by the Hughes-Franklin circuit. According to Harold B. Franklin, plans have been almost completed for similar houses seating from 300 to 500, in the following cities:

San Francisco, Berkeley, San Diego, Sacramento, Oakland, Stockton, San Jose, all in California; Phoenix, Ariz., and Dallas, Tex.

The plans for these "Miniature" theatres call for approximately the same arrangements, novelties and automatic features employed in the Studio. The reason for extending representatives of the type, declared Franklin, is that the Studio has indicated this class of house has a strong appeal to a large portion of the public.

Michigan Allied in Tieup With Detroit Daily Paper

Allied Theatres of Michigan has effected a tie-up with the Detroit Free Press by which the Michigan unit's financial problem will be eased. The association has arranged for the publishing of a theatre directory giving the program of 50 theatres in Detroit. This directory will appear in the paper daily. Theatres pay $6 per week for the space, the money going to the association and the newspaper receiving advertising on the screen.

Ezell May Start Circuit

Claude Ezell, recently resigned as eastern general sales manager of Warner-First National, is understood planning a small circuit of three or four theatres in Texas, where he formerly lived. He is in Dallas at present.

25,000 MEN WOULD BE AFFECTED BY CANAVAN'S PAY CUT PROPOSAL

Paramount Names Seven Associates For Unit System

Paramount's Hollywood studio will immediately undertake the unit system of production with B. P. Schulberg at the head of seven associate producers. The seven already appointed are Louis D. Lighton, Felix Young, Lloyd Sheldon, Percy Heath, Mel Shauer, Robert Harris and Ned Marin.

The system was worked out by Emanuel Cohen, Jesse Lasky and Schulberg. The Astoria studio in the east will close in February, following the completion of the Claudette Colbert and Nancy Carroll pictures now in production there.

New Better Films Council Organized at Wilmington

Cooperation for better pictures is the objective of the New Castle County Better Films Council of Delaware, organized at a meeting in Wilmington of representatives of more than 40 organizations of the city and county. The Council will aid the work of the Motion Picture Committee of the Delaware State Federation of Women's Clubs. Mrs. E. M. Barsham of Wilmington is chairman.

"The program is entirely a civic welfare educational plan, carrying no political significance through recommendations for any kind of legislation," said Mrs. Barsham. "If children are allowed to attend pictures intended for adults only, it is the fault of the mothers. The policeman on the corner and the exhibitors should not be expected to regulate the lives of children."

Among the listed cooperating organizations is Warner Theatre Company, Paul Costello and Lewis Black.

New Quick Train Service for Film

The transportation committee of the Atlanta Film Board of Trade has succeeded in inaugurating express service on a de luxe train running between Chicago and Tampa, Fla., which hitherto has never carried express. It is now possible for motion picture films to leave Atlanta at 8 P. M. and arrive in Tampa before noon the following day. Intermediate points will be correspondingly benefited. This train goes south through middle Georgia and follows the west coast of Florida straight to Tampa without going through Jacksonville, thereby saving 12 hours.

Story Editor Back at Fox

Florence Strauss, Columbia story editor, has taken a similar position at Fox. No successor has been named at Columbia as yet. Mrs. Strauss was previously at Fox, and will work with Dick Rowland.

Favors 10 and 15 Per Cent Slash for Union Men

Would Be Effective in Both Circuit and Independent Houses for 36 Weeks Starting Dec. 14

Twenty-five thousand union men would be affected by acceptance of wage cuts for a minimum period of 36 weeks beginning December 14, as proposed this week to members of 700 locals affiliated with the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employes and Motion Picture Operators, by President William F. Canavan. Meetings will be held this week by the 700 units, with answers expected within 10 days.

If Canavan's recommendation is acted upon favorably by all locals, an aggregate saving to theatres of more than $1,000,000 is foreseen by exhibitor leaders who have hailed Canavan's action as "a fortunate gesture having a very important stabilizing effect on exhibition affairs."

Canavan's proposal recommends a 10 per cent wage cut be accepted by all members of his organization whose salaries range from $45 to $70 a week, and that a 15 per cent cut be accepted on salaries of more than $70. If accepted by the locals, Canavan proposes that the wage cuts continue in effect for a minimum of 36 weeks from December 14.

Last June, on Canavan's recommendation, all locals affiliated with his organization voted voluntary salary rebates which, it was estimated, saved theatres $450,000 in union wages. The summer proposal was in effect for 10 weeks and involved voluntary rebates of from 5 to 7½ per cent of all union wages. This proposal, however, was made only to the six national circuits by the union. Independent exhibitors were asked to make their own negotiations with their locals. Technicians and other union help employed at the studios in Hollywood and New York are not affected by the request.

Canavan's newest recommendation does not distinguish between circuit and independent theatres; his recommendation being directed at all theatrical union members wherever employed.

Exhibitor leaders were enthusiastic in their approval of Canavan's action. Speaking officially for members of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, of which he is president, M. A. Lightman declared that "nothing could have a more stabilizing effect on the exhibitors of the United States than this voluntary adjustment on the part of organized labor.

"It is a most fortunate gesture," Lightman continued, "and it is to be earnestly hoped that the union locals will heed the timely recommendation of their leaders. It is my sincere hope that the proposal will meet with complete acceptance."

M.P. Week Brings Varied Response From the Nation

National Motion Picture Week, for the benefit of unemployed in the various communities over the country, opened on November 18, Wednesday, and swept into full stride over the weekend. The week comes to an end on Wednesday, November 25.

Exact figures are available at this time from a few key cities only, with Boston leading the way. Twelve New York and Brooklyn theatres gave special benefit performances at midnight, Monday, chalking up an estimated total of only $15,000, as part of $500,000 expected to be raised in the New York territory. Tuesday midnight was the date scheduled for most of the other performances. The Roxy and the Palace will show on Wednesday. New York houses which gave benefits on Monday included: Cameo, Capitol, Mayfair, Paramount (New York, Brooklyn), Rialto, Rivoli, State, Strand, Warner, Winter Garden, Brooklyn Strand.

Boston, with 66 theatres participating in the benefit, reported the most successful concerted effort in a philanthropic direction ever staged in the city. Early estimates based on returns from a few of the theatres, placed the total figure at between $35,000 and $45,000. Almost all theatres were sold out.

In Baltimore, 73 houses contributed a total of approximately $21,000, receipts being turned over to police commissioner Charles D. Gaither for administration.

Rochester reported better than $11,000 as its contribution from only seven downtown theatres, with 30,000 seats in neighborhood theatres available for benefits to follow.

Five first-runs and 61 suburban and neighborhood houses in St. Louis gathered a total of $6,000 at benefits held on Saturday. Approximately $4,000 came from the five first-runs, the smaller houses contributing about $2,000. The Fox there plans another benefit Thanksgiving Day for the St. Louis community fund, which is endeavoring to raise $3,000,000 over the city.

Receipts from New Orleans, which has not felt the depression very keenly, were somewhat disappointing, downtown houses turning in only $1,682. San Antonio theatres contributed $1,500 as their share of the general fund. Incomplete returns from Chicago indicate an estimated $15,000 in 325 theatres in the city and Cook County.

Houston, Texas, returned only $1,600 from eight theatres at midnight performances. In Cincinnati, 39 suburban houses in the greater city as well as seven first-runs and the downtown group, are figured to have made a creditable showing, though it is estimated the total will fall rather short of the $35,000 set for the city as quota.

EINFELD COMMENTS ANENT COLLINS

Warners' Advertising Director Says There's a New Era in the Copy Technique of Screen Today

by S. CHARLES EINFELD

Mr. Charles Einfeld, director of advertising and publicity for Warner Brothers, arises to respond and comment upon certain observations concerning motion picture theatre advertising made by Mr. Kenneth Collins, executive vice president and director of publicity for R. H. Macy & Company, New York department store, presented in MOTION PICTURE HERALD last week.

Mr. Einfeld appears to hold the impression that the writer of the article in question, the editor of this publication, "proclaimed" Mr. Collins' views. "Proclaimed" is not the word, "recorded" would be more accurate.

Meanwhile some ardent consideration of technique in the retail advertising of the motion picture, being a function as it must be of some twelve or thirteen thousand theatres covering this land of ours, cannot but be of wholesome effect. Today, in the battle of the grosses at the box office, motion picture theatre advertising carries a larger burden of responsibility than ever before. Motion picture advertising began as mere announcement; today it must sell. TERRY RAMSAYE

I suppose if this had been the first—or possibly the second criticism of the motion picture industry, I should have done my share of cowering under the lash of Mr. Kenneth Collins' scorn as relayed through Terry Ramsaye of MOTION PICTURE HERALD. But this time it is our method of advertising! Mr. Collins is an advertising man as all good advertising men well know. (Exhibitor's note: Mr. Collins is associated with a department store in New York called Macy's. It sells everything from babies' rattles to sailing boats. Macy's is not quite like the general store at your busy corner and it is not a bit like a motion picture theatre—it is a department store.)

Mr. Collins' remarks came to me as the climax of a busy morning of criticism. You see, I had just finished reading eight or nine literary outbursts about a new picture of ours which had just opened. The critics took it quite seriously—but then they are supposed to, aren't they? But an attack upon our advertising technique! I have shrunk before, but this time I wilted. Perhaps, as a matter of actual fact, the unseasonably warm weather had something to do with it. (We've had the warmest November in forty-eight years, you know.)

But, I have been stimulated by these utterances from Olympus—which, being interpreted, is the copy-writing sanctum of R. H. Macy & Company. For there is no doubt that the material emanating from that sanctum is the joy and bewilderment of those members of the advertising fraternity who preoccupy themselves with the technical phases of their art. Every Monday morning, I am assured by persons who ought to know, these connoisseurs, these Ad Club cowboys, leap for the newspapers to see what Macy has to sell and how it is being sold. They chortle, they sigh over the unlikelihood of ever being able to perform such marvels themselves; and then they talk it all over—for hours. If they do not immediately rush to Macy's to buy the goods described in Mr. Collins' inimitable prose, that, after all, is a detail. For this is a matter of art for art's sake.

But, of course, it will be objected that, despite the absence of the cowboys, many thousands of other people do go to Macy's to make purchases. They do indeed. But there is a little matter of six per cent off the prices charged by competitors which, it is diffidently suggested, may possibly have something to do with this weekly landslide of customers. The policy of Six Per Cent is widely known; it travels by word-of-mouth. It is unnecessary to read the Monday morning advertisements to know that Six Per Cent will be in effect behind those crowded counters. How many people have to read the advertisements before being impelled to Thirty-third Street? I don't know. Neither, after all, does Mr. Collins. The results in dollars and cents, of course, are what counts. But what proportion of those results is due to the newspaper copy and what to Six Per Cent—there, my comrades of the motion picture world, I show you a mystery.

In Mr. Collins' judgment, as proclaimed by Mr. Ramsaye, "the motion picture industry in its advertising efforts takes itself far too seriously." So great is this seriousness that in the past five years not all the efforts of all the motion picture advertisers have been able to lure Mr. Collins into a cinema theatre. That is to be regretted. In an age when leaders of thought, leaders of education, statesmen and men of letters are taking a keen interest in the screen—when George Arliss, John Barrymore, Helen Hayes, Lynn Fontanne, Alfred Lunt, John Galsworthy, H. G. Wells and Bernard Shaw, to name only a few, are not ashamed to be associated with the new art—it is decidedly a loss for our theatres not to attract Mr. Collins; but perhaps the loss is not all on our side. And his imperviousness to our advertising may be the consequence, not of faulty copy, but of a simple lack of all interest in, and appreciation of, motion pictures. Some people are like that. But has Mr. Collins canvassed his copy-writing staff, including that group of bright young women who have won such deserved admiration, to learn whether any of them can equal or approach his five-year record? That would seem to be a fair test to determine how far his abstention is due to a purely personal idiosyncrasy.

Advertising, when all is said and done, is not a proposition that is always uniform. The methods adopted vary, and must vary, according to the product which is being advertised. We motion picture people have no Six Per Cent to work for us while we wax whimsical in our copy. We have no asset like the Macy basement with all its bargain glories. Perhaps what we really need is a basement; we ought to get together, our cheeks still red from Mr. Collins' castigation, and see what can be done about it.

We sell one product at a time with our advertising copy; not ours the happiness of disporting ourselves amid a wealth of departments, leaping from soap to cigaret-lighters, from gowns to goloshes. And our product is perishable; a picture can only last for a limited number of weeks at one theatre. Unlike soap, it will not keep indefinitely. Furthermore, we pay a higher rate for space than do the department stores. We sometimes use the great white open spaces so much favored by Mr. Collins, but we cannot afford to use them too much, for we have a definite story to tell and a picture to be sold within a definite time. These circumstances, and many others, follow the usual characteristic of circumstances in altering cases.

Now I, as a motion picture advertising man, would be the last to claim that we have achieved perfection in our trade. But within the last ten years a revolutionary change has taken place in the kind of advertising and publicity used in selling pictures to the public, and in the kind of men who do it. The viewpoint and the methods of a decade ago are extinct today, as everybody who has kept up with the progress of the industry is aware. It may be that Mr. Collins is still thinking of superseded men

"FIVE STAR FINAL" IS COMMENDED BY DAILIES

Warner Film on Tabloids Receives Editorial Comment; Boston Ban Lifted by Mayor Curley

"Five Star Final," the Warner Brothers' production which has been described as an indictment of American tabloid journalism, and which was written by Louis Weitzenkorn, former editor of the New York Graphic, has aroused since its release on screens over the country, a storm of controversy, chiefly among newspaper people.

The opinion of at least an important part of the press, is one of commendation for the producers and for the picture itself in so far as the story it means to tell is concerned.

Malcolm W. Bingay, editorial director of the Detroit Free Press, oldest daily newspaper in Michigan, recently devoted the entire length of his daily column, "Good Morning," to the film. Bingay, noting that numerous communications requesting his opinion of the picture led to the writing of the comment, said in part:

"'Five Star Final' is a faithful, true-to-life picture of the making of a scandal sheet. It is a powerful, accurate indictment of tabloid journalism. . . . (The film) is not an exaggeration. The producers of it have done the public a service in presenting it. It was written by the editor of such a sheet. And he knew his business.

"Decent newspapermen look upon such rags as the ethical lawyer looks upon the shyster and the sincere physician looks upon the cancer-cure quack."

Bingay pointed out an occurence in Detroit very similar to that which forms the theme of the picture, in which the tabloid reporter who withheld the name of a woman implicated in the case, was discharged by his editor.

"If there is any exaggeration (in the picture)," continues the editorial, "it is that the publisher and editor are portrayed as showing regret when their innocent victim commits suicide to save her daughter from their scandal shamble. Such pretenses to decency are not known among publishers of dirt mongering publications.

"It vividly portrays the sadistic heart and soul of the yellow press. It is the most significant picture of the day, presenting as it does one of the gravest evils of our times. Every newspaper reader should see it, to learn to what depths a great and noble profession can be prostituted.

"Every civic leader should see it, that he may be brought to realize how these organs that pander to vice and corruption actually function. Every advertiser should see it, to bring home to him the fact that when he patronizes such newspapers he is helping to finance the spreading of insidious poison in our community."

In Boston, Mayor James M. Curley, under pressure from the local press, had banned "Five Star Final," two weeks ago. The ban was removed this week and necessary permits have been issued for a week of performances during the current seven-day period. The film is being shown at the Publix Olympic and Uptown theatres.

The fact that the newspaper advertising and press notices made no mention of the fight which was waged to obtain the mayor's consent to showing the film, was seen in Boston as indicating that some sort of truce had been reached on the matter between the press and the theatres. Theatres have carried approximately four times their customary advertising space for the film, though the ban is not mentioned in any case.

Editorially, the San Francisco News, advising its readers to see "Five Star Final" on the basis of its being "excellently cast and superbly acted," has this to say, concerning the tabloid, subject of the film:

"Newspapermen everywhere were the first to express shame for the worst of these tabloids. Even those who made them revolted and it is to their credit that 'Five Star Final' was the work of a former editor 'who threw up his job in disgust'." The editorial terms the film "a devastating picture of newspaper life."

Remember Back When?

It was in the year of 1913 and the place was the little village of Arapahoe, Okla. A little theatre was operated there under the intriguing name Shorty's Show Shop. The equipment consisted of an Edison machine and folding chairs. The booth (booth fits the description of some of those places in that day better than projection room) was located directly over the ticket office. Shorty would sell tickets about thirty minutes before the show started. In the intervals between selling tickets he would rush up through a trap door in the booth floor and get his machine ready to start. While the show was in progress, Shorty would sell tickets while a reel was running, by having a boy twist the crank while he hopped down into the ticket office. Anyone wanting a ticket while the show was going on needed only to yell through the ticket window for Shorty. If he was too busy at the time to come down, he would reply in the following manner: "Keep your shirt on, big boy. Why don't you learn to come to the show when it first starts." There goes that bottom loop again." In his spare time, Shorty was expressman and taxi driver.—W. T.

Warner's Reduced Inventories Held Big Achievement

Reduction in inventories to $16,554,210 from $29,511,402, a decline of $12,957,192, was "the most important achievement of Warner Bros. Pictures housecleaning program during the past fiscal year," says the Wall Street Journal. "Film inventories were reduced to $14,727,754 from $25,348,195, a drop of more than $10,000,000; merchandise inventories in the radio and record division were cut to $1,555,397 from $4,163,207."

Clears Decks for Upturn

Commenting on the reductions and the expected results, the Journal says:

"Film inventories in the last analysis may be regarded in the same way as inventories of any other salable merchandise. If goods cost too much, they obviously must be marked down and liquidated. After a year of readjustment, film inventories have been reduced to the lowest level in several years, by the usual amortization of old films and the substitution of new lower cost productions. This should give Warner a good chance to recover its earning power as soon as there is a general business recovery."

Warners' inventories of the last three years are broken down as follows to show what has been achieved:

Films:	1931	1930	1929
	(amounts in terms of thousands)
Released at cost less amort	$9,080	$11,310	$9,247
Completed, not released.	4,283	11,311	10,156
In progress	854	1,398	2,902
Positives & raw film & supplies	509	1,327	1,718
Total films	$14,727	$25,348	$24,025
Mdse., radios & records	1,555	4,163	.....
Grand total	$16,554	$29,511	$24,025

"The reason for the decline in inventory this year," says the Journal, "is: First, the lowered cost of pictures released; second, a more rapid release of films, which means that films held in inventory are fewer, and, third, the studio shutdown last summer, which permitted films on hand to be consumed. Cost of films released is about $2,000,000 less than last year. Films completed, but not released, show a decline of over $7,000,000."

Cites Stanley Expense Cut

Note is made of progress in reduction of expenses in the theatre division as reflected in the report of Stanley Company of America, Warner subsidiary. This showed an increase in net profit for the year ended August 29, to $1,711,254, from $1,366,992 in the preceding year, though total income for the period showed a decline to $7,381,647, as against $7,878,931.

"The plan to fix the stated value of Warner Bros. no-par common stock at $5 a share is designed to permit the transfer of a portion of the stated capital to surplus," the Journal pointed out, adding that the plan "will permit setting up a capital surplus or reserve of $63,945,008, against which future capital writedowns may be made if necessary."

Monogram To Expand

Monogram is planning to increase its release schedule to 36 picture next year, an increase of eight, said W. Ray Johnston, president, on his return from Hollywood. Fifteen of the 28 for this season have been completed.

METRO-GOLDWYN-MAYER

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

D. W. GRIFFITH has finished his new picture in New York. The secrecy surrounding its theme may be attributed to the fact that Mr. Griffith and his distributor, United Artists, both are debating the manner in which the production should be presented to the public.

The exact nature of the plot has been kept a dark secret, and only a few are aware of the fact that the entire story hinges around an habitual drunkard, wherein lies the problem... in this case an inevitable merchandising issue rather than any involved in the narrative.

It seems that release of the picture as a preachment against drink will immediately bring down the wrath of the anti-prohibitionists, whose strength is recognized, while to build up the film as propaganda for the "antis" would automatically incur the enmity of the "pros." A neutral stand would not give the story any sales point.

To date, there has been no solution arrived at, but in any event, Griffith and U. A. feel that they'll get hell from somewhere—but where the most?

Hal (United Artists) Horne, who, incidentally, is a combination of Hershfeld, Botsford, Jimmy Walker and Lichtman, calls the AMPA members a "bunch of minute men."

"Yeah," says Hal, "they all expect to be fired any minute!"

Hal, incidentally, denies that Doug Fairbanks will leave United Artists to join Burton Holmes Travelogues.

At the last meeting of the AMPA, the speaker of the minute was gravely discussing the film situation abroad. He had just finished an impressive speech, using "foreign versions" as the concluding words, when Hal Horne, who had evidently been dozing, jumped to his feet and demanded of President Ed Finney that "sex be kept out of our weekly discussions."

Hal explained later that he thought the speaker was talking about foreign virgins.

It's a secret, but the Lucky Strike ciggie people have signed Buddy Rogers as the star of a series of radio broadcasts commencing in January.

(NOTE: Whiteman, Calloway, Rolfe, Lopez, et al, do not apply for the orchestra job; it has already been filled.)

It was at a "wake."

Allied's Kinograms newsreel was the "corpse."

We were one of the "mourners."

"Too bad it died," we said in condolence to an official of Educational, which handled physical distribution of the reel. "And how much did your company make on the deal?" we queried.

"Well," replied the Educational executive, "we did not fare so badly, luckily for us—we netted $1.32 on the five issues!"

J. A. Livingston, writing in the "Daily Investment News," New York, has this to say of the picture business and economics:

"As a whole, the outlook for motion picture companies is not black. It has taken a good deal of experience and a drastic depression to settle the business, but it now appears that managerial ability will determine the ultimate issue. The companies in the field, apparently, can earn money and pay dividends if they arrange their affairs conservatively!"

The italics are ours.

Sam Katz, president of Publix theatres, has told managers of his circuit to cut next year's standing pass list at least 25 per cent.

Jerome Kern, of the music publishing profession, is in charge of one brigade collecting funds in the industry in New York for unemployment relief. His morning mail brings many checks. Among those received this week was one for $15, with the explanation that this represented 1 per cent of the sender's weekly losses.

The current era in motion picture business affairs appears to be a fertile field for the would-be crystal gazers, know-it-alls and rumor-mongers.

They would have you believe that Joseph P. Kennedy will soon be president of Fox; that Sidney R. Kent is all set for the RKO presidency; that William Fox is right at the minute on his way over to "Tenth Avenue" to take over the presidency of the Fox companies; that Kennedy will assume the presidency of RKO; that Kent will be the next Fox president; etc., et al., etc., etc., etc., et al.

That trouble between National Screen and Fox West Coast began when the circuit demanded an immediate 50 per cent reduction in rentals of National trailers.

Fox West Coast, which operates independently of the parent organization in New York, cancelled National's service when the demands were refused, but this week, it is understood, reconciliation was effected by Pat Garyn and Herman Robbins, National executives, who made a special trip to Los Angeles.

Hollywood producers are supposed to have used concerted effort in tabooing the practice of stars affixing their signatures to testimonial advertising. The current series of Lucky Strike ads, therefore, calls for an explanation—particularly since one important campany has notified managers of its theatre division to "cash in" on the tie-up!

Leading stellar lights of practically all companies are included in the current endorsement of Luckies.

Joseph J. Sicardi's appointment to management of the Liberty and Park at Plainfield, New Jersey, was recently the subject of a lengthy editorial of commendation in the town's newspaper, which began in this manner: "His unusually rapid rise in the business may be attributed to his decision not to attend college!"

Exhibitors holding a Metro short subject sales contract get a break with the new Laurel and Hardy comedy. MGM agrees to deliver eight Laurel-Hardys this season at a contracted rental which cannot be changed on the current release even though it is a four-reeler and theatres in many spots are using it as a feature on double bill programs.

GREAT things, these popularity contests conducted by fan magazines and newspapers, what with a temporary increase in circulation for the periodicals and the flowery bouquets, backslapping and barrage of adjectives for the winnahs.

Picture companies, stage interests and radio broadcasting concerns, we hear, spend huge sums supporting their candidates, buying stacks of the papers or magazines in which vote coupons appear.

The newest wrinkle in this gagging-for-circulation is an unpopularity contest now being sponsored by a New York newspaper, which reports Amos 'n' Andy and Rudy Vallee in top spots as candidates for oblivion. Which further proves how accurate is the little old box-office as a barometer of public taste.

Both "names" appeared in a motion picture some time ago at a time when their alleged popularity was at its height—and each production "flopped" tremendously.

In a communication to exhibitor clients, Universal suggests in connection with the showing of "Frankenstein"—described as "an electrifying drama"—that a lobby display warn the nervous to avoid seeing the picture. This, according to Universal executives, is to "avoid unfavorable reaction later."

Children were barred during this week's "Frankenstein" showing at Detroit, and no one was allowed to enter the theatre during the screening of the last reel.

Metro's studio chiefs tell us that talking pictures are moving out of the four walls that enclosed them when they first came into being, and are going outdoors. Don Eddy this week issued a plea to Hollywood reporters and trade paper representatives to aid the new RKO-Pathe studio regime in upholding morale of production workers by first discussing with Chief Dave Selznick, or with Don, any rumors involving changes or the new setup. Truly an unusual request, this communication, which is prompted "primarily to prevent the demoralization of the personnel by publication of untrue stories, and secondly to avoid personal and professional injury to individuals."

Some extra presumptious and larcenous person ventured the other day to purloin a newsreel camera and a whole array of lenses and other equipment from Dick Sears' motor car up Boston. The stolen goods included most of the silent equipment with which Dick so successfully supplements the work of the sound camions under his charge in the New England territory: Debrie Model H camera, No. 1076 and six Carl Zeiss lenses, magazines and carrying cases. The camera was labeled Pathe News. In view of the fact that Dick is personally known to every sheriff and policeman from Providence, Rhode Island, to Eastport, Maine, and way stations, it is not only illegal but unwise to steal his stuff.

DE MILLE WILL MAKE PICTURES IN RUSSIA

Director, "Sold" on Soviet, Returns Crediting Land of Drohsky With Most Drama, Best Opportunities

Cecil B. DeMille, the impressario who made the bathroom glorious, and for more than a decade an outstanding contributor to the serious attainments of the screen, is now likely to do something about Russia, next.

Mr. DeMille returned to New York, en route to Hollywood, on Tuesday aboard the S. S. Augusta, from an eight months' leisurely jaunt through 12 foreign countries, principally Russia. He rode camels on Egypt's deserts, a ricksha through the Orient and a droshky in Russia.

"Sold" on the Soviet

Yes, Mr. DeMille will make pictures in Russia; maybe one, perhaps two, possibly more. He does not know how many, even refusing definitely and officially to admit, upon his arrival in New York, that he contemplates any. Yet, the inference was made clear by the director who admitted that he is "sold" on the Soviet as he never has been sold before.. "It packs more drama per square inch than can be found in a square mile elsewhere," he said. "Russia offers many and marvelous opportunities!"

DeMille indicated that he is in possession of a "wealth of material secured throughout the world," but stated that no definite selection of theme had been made. He would neither confirm nor deny reports that a picturization of Russia's "five-year plan" would mark his re-entrance into pictures. He plans to continue production under his own banner—if at all—but admitted that his most recent contract, with M-G-M, expired simultaneously with his departure from Hollywood and had not been renewed. No definite distribution plans are in mind, he said, although he appears to favor Metro.

See Pilgrimage to Russia

Following a short stay in New York, Mr. DeMille will leave for Hollywood, remaining on the West Coast no more than two or three weeks. His return to New York is expected to lead to the pilgrimage to Russia and a materialization of his new-born hope for the Soviet and motion pictures.

DeMille said he had visited 12 countries and "found depression prevalent throughout each."

"No one country is suffering more acutely than another," he reported, "although all of them look toward America with hope of a solution."

"American pictures still are extremely popular, but the French are gaining a strong foothold throughout all of the Orient."

He told of a peculiar arrangement in the Orient, where many theatres use three screens, side-by-side, for showing English or other foreign language talkers. On the center appears the talking picture, flanked on the left by moving titles in the native tongue, and on the right by the next most prevalent.

DeMille was a founder of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, and when told of Marie Dressler's recent achievement of winning Academy awards for her work in "Min and Bill," he was reminded of his entrance, during the trip, into Jerusalem. The Holy City, he found, had been buried, not under the ruins of time, but under posters and paper advertising "Min and Bill"!

Throughout his entire trip, he said, he heard a strong undercurrent of dissatisfaction for talkers. "Everywhere they want at least a partial return to silents and the silent art, its restfulness and pantomime," he said. The talking picture "has robbed motion pictures of that 'something' so widely successful in the silent drama."

"It is vitally necessary," De Mille said, "for all American companies to produce foreign versions in England, France and Germany."

At this point, the discussion was interrupted by a bellboy, who left Mr. DeMille's suit at the Pierre with a handsome tip—paid in Russian roubles.

MGM Studio Is Reaching Peak With Numerous Films In Work

Shooting schedules at the MGM coast studio are nearing peak capacity, with four companies starting work in addition to the several already in production. Six new pictures will start shooting within the next two weeks.

Among those in work are: "Courage," "Tarzan," "Freaks," "City Sentinel," "Emma." In preparation are: "Arsene Lupin," "Polly of the Circus," "The Wet Parade" and others, as yet untitled.

Reginald Smith Acquires PDC Company in England

(By Cable from London)

Reginald Smith, former chief of PDC (Pathe), has acquired the company following appointment of Solly Newman as executive in England for RKO Radio and RKO Pathe. Twelve to 20 British pictures are planned on PDC's first year program.

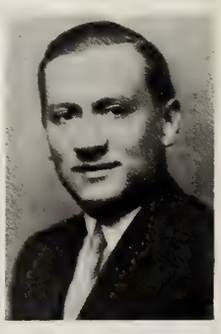
F-N Head in England

Warner House, elaborate exchange building just erected in Warder street, London, by Warner Brothers, is now occupied by First National Film Distributors, the sales forces of the latter having just taken possession. D. E. Griffith, general sales manager of the company in Great Britain, had been made managing director. He will have as his general sales manager, D. C. Dobie, formerly a prominent member of First National's London sales force, who leaves the post of Liverpool exchange manager to take up his new duties.

Named RCA Vice-President

J. C. Van Horn has been elected a vice-president of RCA Institutes, Inc. Van Horn will be in charge of the four resident schools in New York, Chicago, Philadelphia and Boston. The institute trains laboratory workers and engineers.

A Newsreel Studio



What is perhaps the only exclusive newsreel studio in the country is located in Chicago where J. A. Darrock heads a staff of cameramen and sound engineers for Movietone News, Inc. The studio was inaugurated to save time and money in making sound films of political and civic leaders. Heretofore, photographing persons in the public eye has necessitated running cables, considerable loss of time for both the producer and the subject, not to mention the nuisance and confusion created through lack of privacy when pictures were made in offices. In the studio, treated for perfect acoustics, the pictures are made under ideal conditions. Camera motor noise is eliminated by shooting from a separate room through optical glass. In the studio long shot and closeup cameras can be operated simultaneously, saving the time necessary for closeup repetition. Civic leaders have commented favorably on the studio method of making special news pictures as against having their office forces make a picnic out of the affair when done in their own business quarters.

J. C. Smith Returns to Publix As Contact Man

John C. Smith, former Publix manager who has rejoined the company, has been assigned to a part of M. H. Feld's territory as contact man. Smith was with Publix six years before leaving to go into business for himself. His new territory will embrace Denver, Buffalo, Rochester, Syracuse, New Haven and the Metropolitan in Boston.

Explorer to Tibet; May Be The Subject of Raspin Film

Gene Lamb, noted explorer and authority on Tibet and China, who appears in the forthcoming "Explorers of the World," first feature of the newly formed Raspin Productions, which opens at the Criterion on December 14 at a $2 top, twice a day, leaves shortly for Tibet on an expedition which will require two years.

E. B. Raschbaum

The photographic record of his exploration will probably be a feature film of the Raspin company, of which Edwin B. Raschbaum is president. It is planned to show "Explorers of the World" in 50 key cities. The company will produce both features and shorts, exclusively the record of various scientific expeditions. A press dinner, at which only game will be served, will be held at the Explorers' Club, December 7. P. K. Thomajan, with Harold Lloyd on the Coast the last five years, is publicity director of the Raspin company.

THREE AUSTRALIAN FIRMS FORM TO TAKE OVER UNION THEATRES

Suburbans Ahead!

Available reliable data indicates that suburban houses in San Francisco are relatively making the best showing. Questionnaires circulated among regular patrons reveal that many picture-goers who previously attended the downtown houses regularly are now steady patorns of the neighborhood residential theatres. The reasons assigned for the swing are lower scale of prices, convenience of location and the unemployment situation which prevents people from going downtown for their pictures. Newspaper advertising reflects the same change; that of the downtown houses has recently been much curtailed, while that of the surburbans has remained unchanged in amount.

Technicolor Sees '31 Net of $150,000

Net income of from $150,000 to $200,000, will be earned by Technicolor, Inc., for the current year, according to Herbert T. Kalmus, president. The lower net would be equivalent to 29 cents a share on the 517,548 shares of no-par capital stock. The 1931 dividend was at the rate $1.31 a share. Present indications, Kalmus stated, are that no financing will be necessary.

Because of producer adjustments to present economic conditions, the company has been able to discontinue carrying deposits as reserve account, and the earned reserves have now realized to the extent of about $1,100,000. Customer deposits have diminished from $1,500,000 to about $400,000, according to Kalmus.

Famous Declares Dividend

Famous Players Canadian Corporation has declared the regular quarterly dividend of 50 cents per share on the issued shares of the company. Dividend is payable December 26 to stockholders of record December 4.

Doyle Among Directors; See Few Assets Left

Hoyt's Alleges Breach of Buying Agreement—Greater Union Considers Alliance With Distributors

By CLIFF HOLT, Sydney

Every section of the trade in Australia is following with intense interest the attempts of its directors, accountants and legal men to stabilize the affairs of Union Theatres, Ltd., which recently passed into the hands of the bankers for reconstructive measures. All are interested because every one is so vitally concerned.

A week after the bank stepped in and refused to advance further credit, three new companies were formed to take over the old Union company pending the sale of its assets by auction. As insiders see it, the position is that Union, with its principal houses turned over to the new companies, will have few assets left. As no outside interests are likely to undertake such a burden as Union represents in its existing state, the newly formed organizations will be able to buy at approximately 25 per cent of what the value would have been estimated a fortnight ago.

Two Former Directors Named

The new registered companies are: Greater Union Theatres, with a nominal capital of $2,500,000; Greater Union (Management), Ltd., nominal capital, $100,000; Greater Union (Extension), Ltd., $2,500,000. Directors of these companies are: Stuart F. Doyle and Edwin Geach, who were directors of the old concern; W. G. Layton, former town clerk of Sydney; J. J. Rouse, head of Kodak, Ltd., W. Sayle, H. Y. Russell and A. Charlesworth.

The list of theatres turned over by Union to Greater Union numbers 29, leaving a number unaccounted for. Two years ago Union Theatres instituted an expansion policy, and, in carrying it out, took under lease several theatres all over Australia. All these apparently have now been literally dumped back on their owners. The tenant couldn't pay, so the landlord had no option but to acquiesce.

Legal Bombardment Threatens

Legal guns threaten to boom, it is reported, on the issue of whether the Hoyts-Union buying committee still exists or becomes inoperative with the flotation of the new companies. Hoyt's alleges that a breach of that agreement has been committed; and meanwhile Greater Union, Ltd., is considering a proposal to form a buying committee by allying itself with the distribution group. It is suggested that the circuit, and the various distributing companies, be given voting powers, in accordance with their importance, on a special arbitrary committee to sit in judgment on all pictures imported by the exchanges with which Union holds

Advertising Vital!

Advertising is the most important element of business success at the present time, in the opinion of Dr. Julius Klein, assistant Secretary of Commerce, expressed during a radio address this week over a Columbia network. Klein cited numerous instances in which "go-getting" publicity methods had brought profit in a depression period. The three "P's" for business success, said Dr. Klein are: publicity, personnel and products. "There is no magic formula for increasing profits," he said. "In the last analysis it is simply the application of sound business principles, stick-to-it-ive-ness, common sense and ingenuity, with special attention to those 'three P's.'"

United Amusement Year Net $206,000

Operating profits of United Amusement Corporation, Montreal, for the fiscal year recently ended amounted to $355,239, as compared with $429,786 for the previous 12 months, according to the annual financial statement. After depreciation, bond interest and discount, there remained a net profit of $205,855, which is equal to $2.76 a share on 74,367 common shares outstanding, the dividend paid being at the annual rate of $2 per share. United Amusement operates 20 theatres, of which 17 are in Montreal.

The company maintained its policy of writing down equipment valuations and increasing its reserves. Surplus brought forward stands at $759,960, as compared with $724,200 at the end of the previous year.

Foreign Firms Retrenching

The present economic situation is forcing all European film companies to look for means of cutting expenses and organizing their trading on a more rational basis, according to the film division of the Department of Commerce.

Named Publicity Head

Dillon Damon has been named publicity director for Warners in England, with London headquarters. Damon succeeds Leila Stewart, resigned.

Double Bill Study Brings Fast Action

widely read throughout the industry. They were discussed with me by sales managers of several large distributing organizations and by exhibitor leaders. Because of their timeliness and the seriousness of the subject, interest in them was genuine and widespread."

Among those who commented upon the HERALD'S presentation of the problem were: Lee Marcus, vice-president in charge of distribution of RKO Radio and Pathe; Fred Quimby, short subject sales manager, M-G-M; Frank Walker of the M. E. Comerford circuit, and a director of the M. P. T. O. A.; Aaron Saperstein, president of Allied Exhibitors of Illinois; James Coston, divisional manager, Warner Theatres; William C. Smalley, up-state New York chain operator, and E. W. Hammons, president, Educational Pictures.

Declared "Great Service"

"MOTION PICTURE HERALD has performed a great service to the industry in conducting this comprehensive study of a vital industry problem," was a comment frequently repeated.

The HERALD'S study of double featuring was presented in the issues of November 14 and 21 and revealed that the practice is apparently on the increase in spite of the fact that it obviously is opposed by a large majority of exhibitors, production and distribution executives. In addition, it was ascertained that a large number of theatres are maintaining the practice unwillingly, being virtually forced to do so by competitive double featuring theatres which refuse to abandon the policy.

The study also disclosed that a majority of distribution executives believe that continued spread of the practice will eventually impair the quality of product, will create serious product shortages and will have a disastrous effect on short subject sales and production. Exhibitors, while claiming improved grosses from the practice in many situations, expressed fear that this result could not be maintained indefinitely. Other exhibitors vigorously oppose continuance of the practice unless it is confined to subsequent-runs.

The practice is common throughout New England, in Chicago, New York, Cleveland and northern California, and is also known in numerous other sections where, however, it has not yet attained serious proportions.

Clipping Twin Bills

An attempt to reduce double featuring throughout one of its most serious New York zones is being made by Loew's and Manhattan Playhouses, both agreeing to eliminate the practice at strategic theatres. Loew's will abandon the policy at the Avenue B, Canal, Commodore and Delancey theatres, while the Manhattan Circuit will reinstate single features, in return, in the following houses: Apollo, Clinton, Florence, Hollywood, New Delancey and Palestine. All houses involved are situated on the lower East side where the practice is widespread.

The move is said to have been made after the policy became general in the zone and results proved unsatisfactory.

Stern Again Universal Club Head; $500 to Unemployed

Herman Stern has been re-elected to his third term as president of the Universal Club, home office organization in New York of Universal employes. Other officers are: Paul Gulick, vice president; Oscar Binder, treasurer; Harriet Ratner, secretary. The board of directors is composed of Helen E. Hughes, C. B. Paine, E. Wells, Sydney Singerman, Mrs. C. F. Hall, James Jordon, Morris Goodman, W. Bollman, Eugene Cox, Theresa Hart and B. Biggart.

At the initiation banquet, it was voted to give the profits of the club's Halloween entertainment, $500, to unemployment relief.

Indiana Exhibitors Fight Further Tax; Easley President

Organized opposition to the levying of any additional theatre taxes in Indiana is contemplated by the state Associated Theatre Owners' organization, whose board of directors met this week in Indianapolis. It was pointed out that 200 Indiana theatres have been forced to close in the past three years due to business conditions, and any additional operating burdens on the 400 theatres remaining are to be vigorously opposed.

Directors of the state organization elected Walter F. Easley of the K. of P. Theatre, Greensburg, president; A. C. Zaring, vice-president; Harry Markum, treasurer, and Mrs. Helen B. Keeler, secretary, all of Indianapolis. Charles R. Metzger, Indianapolis, was reappointed attorney and business manager.

This week's meeting went on record as favoring an amendment of the copyright statutes to describe holdovers as breaches of contract rather than of copyright.

Goldhammer N. Y. Sales Manager of Warner-FN

Andy Smith, Eastern sales manager of Warners-First National, has named L. E. Goldhammer, for several years in charge of Warner Brothers' Minneapolis branch, manager of the metropolitan sales division.

Smith further announces that Joe Vergesslich will be manager of the New York exchange, Harry Decker will have charge of the Brooklyn division, and George W. Balsdon, Jr., will have charge of the New Jersey branch.

E. W. Hammons, president of Educational, and L. A. Young, head of Tiffany, have extended the distributing arrangement between Tiffany and Sono Art-World Wide. This places a quietus on reports that Tiffany was to terminate its agreement with Educational January 1.

Hammons is now on the Coast for production sessions at the Educational, Sennett and Tiffany studios and to speed up the Tiffany schedule, besides conferring on the industrial films of Educational Talking Pictures, Ltd.

Tiffany's "Hotel Continental" is likely to go into camera work while Hammons is on the Coast. Shooting is to start on Sennett's Moran and Mack special.

IATSE and Electrical Union Approach Fight On Studios

The IATSE, of which William F. Canavan is president, is engaged in a fight over studio jurisdiction with the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers. Harold Smith, IATSE Hollywood local head, demands his men be included in a new studio agreement set for November 29, insisting that a walkout of all IATSE branches will follow studio refusal.

IBEW is claiming jurisdiction over sound jobs, and would step in if IATSE walked out. Warner-First National have indicated studios' position by ordering a standard salary of $100 weekly for all sound men. Some salaries previously reached $350.

Levine of Mascot Pictures Is In New York From Coast

Nat Levine, president of Mascot Pictures Corporation, who specializes in serials, leaves the coast on Thursday for his first trip to New York since last March. He is expected to arrive on December 1.

He will bring a print of "The Lightning Warrior," third serial, featuring Rin-Tin-Tin in 12 episodes. Levine will probably announce his 1932-33 season, and will return to Hollywood after a short stay.

Moss Opens Own Agency

Alec Moss, for years identified with motion pictures as advertising and publicity director for Columbia, has opened his own advertising agency at 185 Madison Avenue, New York. He will serve accounts in various fields, including entertainment.

Johnston Back in New York

W. Ray Johnston, Monogram Pictures president, has returned to New York from the Coast, where he conferred with Trem Carr on production. Johnston visited key Monogram exchanges on the way east. Shooting of the independent product is progressing rapidly.

Balance Sheets Outrank Scenarios for Change

Much Housecleaning Already Done And More Is Anticipated; And How the Rumors Fly!

BY LEO MEEHAN

"Fun in a Powder House" might be an appropriate title for the story of this week in Hollywood. Meaning that never has there been a time when the production community has been more fretted and on edge, while a group of the biggest "big wigs" of the business are conferring daily—and nightly—behind closed doors. The Rumor Editor consequently is due for a complete mental and physical collapse!

Big Boss Will Hays, Adolph Zukor, Harry Warner, Hiram Brown, Nicholas Schenck, E. W. Hammons and Carl Laemmle are among the executives here in conference with Winfield Sheehan, Sam Goldwyn, Louis B. Mayer, Irving Thalberg, Jack Warner, Joe Schnitzer, Charles Rogers, David Selznick, Harry Cohn, Junior Laemmle, Ben Schulberg and others who preside at the studios.

Meanwhile, the "innocent bystanders"—actors, writers, directors, supervisors, secretaries, prop boys and gatemen among them—shiver and speculate. What's to come of it? That's the question on Hollywood Boulevard today. Generally, it may be said that the production machinery is getting a thorough inspection and overhauling. Efficiency and economy measures are discussed along with programs for improved product for less money. Much housecleaning already has been done. More is anticipated. As Marie Dressler told Vice President Curtis the other day, we're an industry now, not a bunch of mountebanks. Balance sheets are outranking scenarios for a change.

Listening in around the lots I hear that:

Will Rogers is headed for Manchuria to cover the Chino-Japanese ½ of 1 per cent war.

Bryan Foy has bought the old Sunset studios in Culver City and will produce independently.

Harold Franklin announces he will open replicas of his Studio theatre in Hollywood at San Francisco, Oakland, Berkeley, Stockton, San Jose, Sacramento and San Diego, California, and Phoenix, Arizona, and Dallas, Texas. They will have the trick automatic features of the Studio and each will seat from 300 to 500.

John Arnold, president of the American Society of Cinematographers, says traveling camera shots are being much overdone, thereby spoiling a lot of photographic effects and adding heavily to costs. Predicts the number will be greatly curtailed shortly. Good!

Fox West Coast has patched up its row with National Screen Service and the latter will resume the making of trailers for FWC houses.

Photophone Cuts Deficit $862,326

The deficit of RCA Photophone has been reduced $862,326, or to $2,576,498 from $3,438,824 a year ago, according to the balance sheet of the company dated as of September 30 1931. The investment and advances of Photophone to its subsidiaries totaled $1,203,531, against $2,484,319 as of August 31, 1930, while the corporation had notes payable to RCA amounting to $1,000,000.

Notes and accounts receivable totaled $2,165,482 and cash amounted to $1,838,010, compared with $2,349,049 and $489,975, respectively, as of August 31, 1930. Total assets as of September 30 amounted to $15,210,372, compared with $18,279,619 as of August 31, 1930. The company was formed in April, 1923, and has outstanding 140,000 shares of no par value carried on the balance sheet at $14,000,000.

Rights to subscribe to RKO debentures expire December 21 and the committee on securities of the New York Stock Exchange has ruled that the Class A stock shall not be quoted ex rights until further notice and that all certificates delivered after November 23 must be accompanied by due bills, which may be obtained at the office of the secretary.

Ask Receiver For Denver House; Fails To Pay Taxes

A receiver has been asked for the Rivoli theatre, Denver, which has been operating under the management of Frank Milton, on a policy of musical revues and pictures. The suit alleges title holders failed to pay taxes on the building and failed to pay interest on a note.

The Rivoli is Denver's largest subsequent run house, on which Mrs. Mary Clarke Steele holds a $70,000 mortgage. Columbia has been sued in Denver by J. T. Sheffield, veteran exchange manager, on an old controversy arising over the distribution of Columbia product under an agreement made when Columbia opened its branch there.

MGM's Leo-the-Lion Goodwill Tour Nears End at Philadelphia

Leo, MGM's lion, was featured in the annual toy parade of Gimbel Brothers at Philadelphia on Thursday, which climaxed the countrywide tour conducted by Metro as a goodwill builder and as "institutional" advertising of the company's trademark.

Leo has visited practically every important town from Coast-to-Coast and will tour Europe, starting in Spring.

William R. Ferguson, in charge of Metro exploitation, and supervising Leo's tour, closed the Gimbel deal, whereby the lion will continue to make personal appearances at the Philadelphia department store, receiving heavy billing daily in newspaper ads.

Hollywood Shivers As Chiefs Confer With Doors Closed

E. B. Derr and Charles Sullivan have finished up with Howard Hughes as associate producers. The former Pathe production chiefs are busily "negotiating." Derr has been having plenty of headaches with "Scarface," which is still in the laundry.

Norman Taurog will do the talker version of "Miracle Man" for Paramount. He is uncle to Jackie Copper, whose "Sooky" he has just finished.

The motion picture industry is over the top, and first of any division, in the Los Angeles Community Chest drive, reaching its quota of $200,000 under the chairmanship of Winfield Sheehan.

Hal Roach studio, closed down for a Thanksgiving week holiday, will resume work next Monday.

Football fans in the colony out of luck two years in succession: last year they bet on U. S. C.; this year on Notre Dame.

Conrad Nagel and Joan Marsh have gone to Jersey City to open there November 27 for twelve weeks in vaudeville. Playing in a sketch by Edgar Allan Woolf.

Arriving in town amid a barrage of rumors about dissention at RKO studios as to who is boss of what, Hiram Brown repeated with emphasis that David Selznick is boss of production.

More supervisors out of work than at any time in years.

Jean Harlow refuses to collect her weekly pay checks from the Howard Hughes' office. Says she knows one blonde who costs more money, and she proposes to collect. Platinum comes higher than gold, it would seem.

Many character actors who formerly turned up their noses at less than $500 to $1,000 a week are now willing to take day work, and checks not much larger than those for extra people.

When "Delicious" is mentioned, Fox officials beam. The latest Gaynor-Farrell vehicle is said upon good authority to be a "wow." Ready very soon.

Pola Negri's first for Pathe, after all this waiting, is now in the cutting room. Preliminary reports are favorable.

"Lost Squadron" with Director Paul Sloane in command begins to loom up as Radio's ultra-special for the season. Already in the cast are Richard Dix, Robert Armstrong Joel McCrea, Mary Astor, Erich von Stroheim, Dorothy Jordan and Eric Linden.

Einfeld Comments On Collins' Views

principle of the association of ideas he is apt to read this obsession into the advertisements which meet his eye. Not having entered a movie theatre in five years, he is, of course, out of touch with the pictures themselves, and with the reaction of the audiences who pay to see them, and at whom our advertising is directed.

My whole contention, most respectfully submitted, is that Mr. Collins and his department are doing an excellent job under conditions to which their methods are adapted, and in a business which they understand. Whereas we motion picture advertisers are using the methods which, by experience, we have found to be suited to our business—which we also venture to think that we understand.

A thorough search of the files of the metropolitan newspapers would show that from time to time all kinds of advertising styles have been tried by motion picture advertising men—including even whimsicality and understatement. We have tried them, have drawn certain broad conclusions and are trying to carry out the lessons we have learned. And we have had our successes—a long list of them. There have been advertising campaigns on behalf of certain pictures which may have failed to draw Mr. Collins to the box office, but which had a very diffierent effect upon a good many other people. And it was done without the mysterious and incalculable aid of a basement and Six Per Cent.

"My eye," writes Mr. Ramsaye enthusiastically, "skimmed along the shelves back of his desk just to gather what he might think worth having about an office, or what might just float in there. I inventoried two 'New Yorker Albums,' 'The Psychology of Happiness,' by the volatile Dr. Walter B. Pitkin of Columbia and erstwhile scenario writer, Van Loon's 'Story of the Bible' and diverse volumes of fact and fancy, grave and gay, but no fiction."

Well, in our office we have a book, too. Nay, why should I go in for understatement? We have lots of them, and we read "The New Yorker" every week. We have the Encyclopaedia Britannica. But I must blush to admit that we have no works of "fancy," either grave or gay, which are not "fiction." Some day I hope to have a peep inside the arcanum, just to learn the titles of those unknown volumes, so that I may add them to our shelves.

In the meantime, we will all, I suppose, continue to do our best in the business that we best understand; and each morning I shall continue to read the Macy advertisements despite the fact that my experience, as it happens, matches Mr. Collins', and that not one of them has ever lured me to the magic counters where Six Per Cent is king.

Three Companies Form to Take Over Union Theatres contracts. These are Universal, Warner-First National, RKO Radio, Greater Australian Films, distributors of Columbia product, and Union Theatres Feature Exchange.

Negative results were obtained by Robert McLeish, representative of all Australian exhibitors except those in New South Wales, from his conferences with distributors, Western Electric and the Australian Performing Rights Association. From the distributors, McLeish requested a general reduction in film hire of 33 1-3 per cent, from Western Electric, a service charge cut of 50 per cent, and a similar reduction from the APRA.

In the midst of adverse reports shown by Australian amusement concerns, one company, Carroll Musgrave Theatres, Ltd., operators of the Prince Edward theatre, Sydney, emerges with a surplus. For the year ended June 30, Carroll Musgrove returns a profit of $32,460, contrasting with the previous year's profit of $80,670.

New Faces—And Exhibitors' Role In Building Them

now doing the feminine lead opposite the two Barrymores in Arsene Lupin, and figured prominently also in Guilty Hands and Never the Twain Shall Meet. Recognizing as well the value of good comics, MGM also is featuring heavily the long-geared Charlotte Greenwood and Jimmy (Schnozzle) Durante.

Most important among the newer players at Universal are Genevieve Tobin, Sidney Fox, Mae Clarke and Rose Hobart, all of whom have figured importantly the past year. Miss Tobin has been in Lady Surrenders, Seed, Free Love, Up from Under, and Gay Diplomat, the latter for Radio. Sidney Fox has done Bad Sister, Six Cylinder Love, Strictly Dishonorable (her most important role to date) and Nice Women. Mae Clarke has been particularly strong in Waterloo Bridge and Reckless Living. Rose Hobart did Liliom for Fox, Chances and We Three for First National and under her present contract with Universal has been seen in Lady Surrenders and East of Borneo. Like Miss Tobin she is a veteran of the Broadway lights. Bette Davis has not been given as important assignments as these mentioned, but she is another Universal player from whom Junior Laemmle is expecting big things. She did a particularly good job as the romantic lead in Seth Parker's Radio picture, Way Down Home, and at Universal handled herself unusually well in Bad Sister, Seed and Waterloo Bridge. Leon Adams and James Flavin are two personable young men under contract at Universal who will figure in later releases.

At Radio-Pathe, with production activities now combined, Irene Dunne and Edna Mae Oliver became overnight favorites through their fine work in the immortal Cimarron, the outstanding big picture of the past year. Others on the roster of this company are Eric Linden and Arlene Judge, magnificent in Are These Our Children; Ivan Lebedeff, who starred in his own story, Gay Diplomat; Rochelle Hudson, Roscoe Ates (the stuttering comic), Hugh Herbert, John Halliday, whose best to date was in Consolation Marriage; Laurence Olivier, a Ronald Colman type, who did a grand job in Fox's Yellow Ticket but is now a Radio player; Tom Keane, the new Pathe western star, and Marion Schilling of the Gay Girl Comedies.

Sam Goldwyn, one of the shrewdest pickers of star material, seems to have one of the big new bets of the year in Melvyn Douglas. Watch for him opposite Gloria Swanson in Tonight or Never and with Ann Harding in Prestige, his first two cinema assignments. United Artists is also developing Shirley Grey and Barbara Weeks, while Howard Hughes is sponsoring Ann Dvorak, Paul Muni and George Raft.

Columbia is developing two interesting personalities, Richard Cromwell, the boy who came in without any acting experience and played the lead in Tol'able David, and Constance Cummings, a former society girl who has figured prominently opposite Jack Holt.

SHARP FIGHT LOOMS IN CONGRESS ON ANY MOVE FOR ADMISSION TAX

Mythical Stories In Chapter Form For U.S. Release

The next sales season, beginning in May, will see the release of a group of serials of famous mythical stories by a national distributor, according to executives of Jay-Arr Productions, with headquarters in New York, which this week completed plans for the immediate production of "Jack and the Beanstalk" and "Aladdin and the Wonderful Lamp," both ten-chapter two-reel serials, and "Ali Baba and the 40 Thieves," a 12-episode, two-reel version.

Erno Rapee will handle special musical details and scoring of the group, which will feature trick and mechanical photography and production methods. Production will be centered in New York, with considerable outdoor work done at Florida. Charles Vayda is managing agent of Jay-Arr, which states that negotiations were launched this week for release by a national distributing company.

Oklahoma, Kansas Business Better

Business in Oklahoma and Kansas is reported picking up slowly but surely, with many new houses having recently been opened in both states. Considerable theatrical activity is going on in Kansas City, theatre supply houses reporting the movement of much new equipment for remodelling.

In Wichita, two houses reopened to splendid business, it is said. J. O. Hartman, owner of the houses formerly, is planning the erection of two new community houses, each to cost about $25,000. Numerous houses have opened in Oklahoma City and various towns in the state.

The Allied Charities Fund of Kansas City has received $1,500 from employees along film row this week. Ed Dubinsky, president of Publix-Dubinsky, donated $500 personally.

Circuits Favoring Standard Aperture

National circuits of theatres are reported to be favorable to the standard aperture developed by the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences. Lester Cowan, representing the Academy, is in New York this week for a series of conferences. Under the plan, the height of all screens will be three-fourths the width.

'Trial Balloons' Bring Down Signs of Opposition

Film Industry Considered One of Great Stabilizers — Fear Injury to Morale

By F. L. BURT, Washington

A sudden change in sentiment relative to luxury taxes within the past few days gives promise that efforts to impose a tax on admissions may meet with vigorous opposition in Congress.

Plans of the administration for tax legislation have not yet been made known—will not, in fact, until Congress meets—but much of the discussion of various forms of levies has been in response to what in Washington are termed "trial balloons," hints that this or that may be tried, put out to determine the reaction.

Opposition Appearing

While there has been a great deal of discussion of sales and luxury taxes for some time, opposition to these levies is just making its appearance. Opponents of the admission tax point out that, in common with other industries, the theatrical trade has taken a "beating" during the past year or more. The addition of a tax would certained tend to keep away large numbers of patrons who now feel that, despite reduced incomes, part-time jobs and general uncertainty, they can afford to go to the theatre once in a while.

The film industry today is considered one of the great stabilizers of the situation. It is explained in this way: so long as the people can go to the theatre they will remain more or less contented with things as they are—not with the lack of jobs—but with our present form of government. Revolution and radicalism come where the people have no sane outlet for their emotions.

Several Problems Involved

One of the big problems of the situation is to keep up the morale of the people. Another is to distribute the tax burden where it will not fall upon those whose income has been sadly depleted. A third is to raise money. A tax on admissions in many cases will be a tax upon those who cannot well afford it. And, according to its opponents, it will not raise anywhere near the amount of money which has been suggested. The $90,000,000 admission tax revenue 10 years ago was obtained in another era.

Nothing definite, of course, can be said until Congress meets. But there is some question as to whether the President will recommend an admission tax, and, should he do so, whether Congress would see fit to adopt it.

Foy Buys Coast Studios

Bryan Foy has bought the Sunset Studios in Culver City, Calif., and will make all future films there. The name of the plant will be Foy Studios.

See Story Material Market Moving to Production Center

Transplanting of the market for the sale of story material from New York to the scene of production on the West Coast is the movement anticipated by Collier and Flinn Company, Ltd., of Hollywood, in concluding arrangements to represent New York authors' agents and their clients exclusively in California. Among those already signed are Brandt and Brandt, Harold Freedman, George T. Bye, Sidney Phillips, Barbour and McKeogh, Otto Liveright and Ann Watkins.

Belief that present methods of production of talking pictures demand that potential screen material be examined at the studios before the reaching of a decision as to purchase is reflected in the new Collier and Flinn arrangement.

Appointment of Lewis A. R. Innerarity as New York counsel of the company renews an association with John C. Flinn. Innerarity was formerly treasurer of Pathe Exchange, Inc., and Flinn was vice president of Pathe as well as of Producers Distributing Corporation at the time they consolidated.

Adds Burnishing to Regular Processing

Burnishing of prints will be added to the regular system of processing Paramount films, according to arrangements which have just been completed by that company calling for the addition of a burnishing device to each piece of processing equipment.

The effect of the device, it is stated, will be that of running the film through the projector head, which accomplishes the same result in time but often with considerable damage to the film in its early runs. This is expected to eliminate the efforts of the individual projectionist to make the film slip more easily through the mechanism, and particularly the practice of squirting oil along the sprocket holes, which commonly adds to the difficulties met by later projectionists.

Educational Shows Upturn in Profits

Educational showed a large increase in net for the fiscal year ended June 27 when the figure is compared with the loss of $333,499 for the preceding year. For the 1931 fiscal year there was a net of $13,855, equal to 75 cents a share on the 18,362 shares of of 8 per cent preferred outstanding.

THEATRE RECEIPTS

Theatre receipts from key cities over the country for the current calendar week, ending November 21, showed a continuation of the increase recorded last week. The total gross for the current seven-day period from 188 theatres in 30 cities reached $2,357,506, which, compared with the total for the last calendar week, ended November 14, of $2,333,693, indicates an increase of $23,813. Five new low individual figures were recorded this week and no new highs, which compares with three new highs and 11 new lows for the preceding week, indicating fewer theatres are falling below previously set "low" individual gross totals.

Notice to the Sound Picture Industry

PRESENT DAY sound pictures utilizing photographic film sound records are essentially dependent upon several early and important inventions of Messrs. Engl, Vogt, and Massolle. These inventors are German scientists who did pioneer work in this field, and were the first to produce and publicly exhibit successful film sound records.

The attention of the sound picture industry is directed to the following U. S. patents covering certain of these inventions now owned by American Tri-Ergon Corporation.

1. Patent No. 1,713,726, Vogt, et al., granted May 21, 1929. This is the patent popularly known as the "flywheel patent" and it relates to certain methods and apparatus for uniformly moving the sound record film under the control of inertia, either in recording or reproducing machines utilizing sound controlled light in translating the sound to or from the film. This patent also relates to the photoelectric cell when used with such reproducing apparatus, as is now the general practice.

2. Patent No. 1,825,598, Vogt, et al., granted September 29, 1931. This patent relates to the process for producing combined sound and picture film by photographing the sound and pictures on separate films so that they may be developed separately, and then printing both records side by side on a single film. This process, as you know, is very extensively used in the industry. This patent was recently granted after prolonged litigation on priority with Dr. Lee De Forest, in which the Court affirmed the Patent Office decisions in our favor.

Attention is invited to the patents themselves for a fuller understanding of their scope.

Applications for other early and important inventions are still pending.

Producers, exhibitors, and manufacturers utilizing any of the inventions of said patents are hereby notified and warned that they will be held liable for all profits made or damages arising from their infringements of said patents.

Infringement suits have recently been instituted under these patents against representative concerns in the industry. Further suits will be brought, if necessary, against infringing film producers and theatre operators and against manufacturers of infringing apparatus, for the purpose of restraining all unlicensed use of these inventions.

Licenses under these patents may be acquired under proper conditions. The object of this notice is to acquaint the industry with the situation in order that further liability for unlicensed use of the inventions may be avoided.

PASSING IN REVIEW

The department endeavors to set forth two lines of material of service to the exhibitor—first a showman's evaluations of the oustanding pictures—second, reviews of information

"STRICTLY DISHONORABLE" is marvelous entertainment from start to finish and is a distinct credit to Universal, the director and every member of its small but mightily efficient cast. Rarely have I enjoyed sitting through a picture as I did through this one and the picture is so well done that it was over long before we realized it. Which statement should convey much more than mere words.

Paul Lukas, Lewis Stone and Sydney Fox head the cast, but all the others lend a good hand to turn out a really perfect picture. So with those "names" and a title that can be played with, I guess you can call this something of a box office bet. Of course, the campaign that you employ will have to make up the difference, according to the location of your theatre and town. That's your job to work out. But suffice it to say that properly merchandised this one will romp home with healthy receipts. Word-of-mouth advertising will play no small part in the romping process.

The risque spots in the original stage play have been tactfully handled in the picture version and should find no kickbacks in the most straight-laced community. Don't spoil the general effect by selling it with dirt or suggestive copy. Just because a hero has "dishonorable" intentions never filled a maternity ward yet. His intentions never materialized. And since those intentions become very honorable towards the windup the audience will find much to rejoice about.

The fact that this was a successful stage play may not mean much out in the spots where such things count for little more than a catchline in the advertising. But it can be sold on its merits, which is something that does not often happen in pictures. Playing time should, preferably, be away from Sunday or kids' days, not because of the dishonorable intentions, but because you won't want to make a play when the youngsters are apt to flock into your house.

Certain pictures require certain types of campaigns; this one calls for clean-cut selling away from veiled phrases or supposedly wise cracks. It has every element of entertainment that a patron could ask for and that's all you need promise them.

"OVER THE HILL" is decidedly "box office" in every sense of the word and if it does not rate top money, when the season's averages are known, then we miss our guess, and we don't often make guesses, poor or otherwise.

With the star team of "Bad Girl," plus the marvelous acting of Mae Marsh, you have some great bets to start selling. Then, the title is so thoroughly "box office" in appeal that the combination of the two ought to spell S.R.O. business, not only for the first but the subsequent runs as well.

"Audience" value? Well, they'll cry more tears than they've cried in a long, long time, but will they have a good time? I'll say so. I did! So, by this time you must realize that I'm rather "hot" for this picture. Well, I am, because it contains everything that I've yelled for ever since I've been contributing to the reviewing department. It is a story about you and your neighbor; about folk we all know and understand; about a boy who loves his mother and father so much that he would sacrifice anything and everything for them. That's what the box offices of this country have been begging for all season but are not getting.

Every man, woman and child in your community should see this picture. If they don't, it's because you have not given the picture, or your theatre, a square deal in letting them all know you are playing it. It's more a matter of salesmanship than anything else with a picture like this. Your chief task is not so much in the "grand" campaign you put behind it, but rather in the complete coverage you achieve in your method of advertising it.

Those who witness your first performances will be the greatest boosters of all. If they don't go out raving, then their taste for entertainment has gone haywire somehow or other. Augment these word-of-mouth exploiters with a sensible and far-reaching campaign and you have the perfect combination for a profitable and successful run.

Mark my words; you'll be bringing this one back for repeat dates.

"CORSAIR" is a combination of murder on the high seas, hi-jacking and bootlegging, so make up your mind that you have a job on your hands to bring them in.

The picture starts off rather draggy and uninteresting, but gains momentum until it sails along at a pretty steady pace. Chester Morris is not exactly the type his role calls for, but he'll get by. The girl opposite, Alison Loyd (better known as Thelma Todd), is NSH (not so hot) as a lead, but she, too, will be lost in the shuffle if once you get them into the theatre and they become interested in the picture itself.

The title has practically no box office value except where the story will be remembered—it appeared, I believe, in Liberty. So whatever you accomplish with it will be entirely up to the way you handle and sell it. "Names" are nil, other than the star, so it would appear that much labor will be required by the showman to get them into his house.

Its "audience" value is fair, by which we would convey that we found it OK after the slow start, and it ought to get by satisfactorily in most spots throughout the country, especially the smaller cities where they like some action.

Considering the business this hero is engaged in, it may be rather questionable whether the picture is for kids or Sundays, so perhaps you would be wise to book it for the middle of the week when your advertising campaign will do you more good than that opening Sunday crowd's comment.

Don't expect too much from this one; if you do you are apt to be greatly disappointed; especially at your box office. Of course if I wanted to gag a bit I would recommend that you float a campaign among all the bootleggers in your community. They'll get a great kick out of it. Or maybe (still gagging) a private showing for them and then use their testimonials for advertising purposes. Hey, hey.

"THE DECEIVER" is handicapped with a title that should be, but is not, "box office." I use this expression because here you have a mystery picture that rates with the best of them and ought to do over-average business in most spots, especially the cities and towns outside of the million population class. Cast, direction and everything else is fine. Names are not too powerful, but a smart showman with a good sense of entertainment values, plus the ability to appeal to the imagination of his prospective patronage, should produce a campaign, especially through his local papers, that ought to mean real money in receipts.

As mentioned, the title is not too "box office," therefore you must build up the mystery slant via the way you sell it. Which should not be difficult because most mystery pictures offer unlimited opportunities for exploitation and advertising far above those dealing with sex or the eternal triangle.

Its "audience" value is OK. Few, if any, patrons will feel dissatisfied with the show carrying "The Deceiver" as the main attraction; so you need not hesitate to get behind this one with all of your pep and ginger and make them feel that here is a piece of entertainment they will thoroughly enjoy. Some will even get a kick out of trying to pick the murderer, because there are so many who would like to kill this bird that any one of them might be the guilty party. There again you have some selling angles that ought to help you along.

Personally, I feel that this one needs no aid from another feature in order to do business, but that, of course, is a matter of local opinion and the manager is the one to decide what kind of a show he should assemble when booking this picture.

OK for either Sunday or kid showing. Not that murders are to be glorified for the younger generation, but that part of the picture will

"AROUND THE WORLD IN EIGHTY MINUTES" is a travel picture, but a mighty interesting one at that. Of course, you must remember that it has no less a personality than Douglas Fairbanks himself to inject the pep and comedy that it needs so badly to lift it out of the realm of "travelogues" and into the feature class for those houses where the cash customers will shell out for this kind of entertainment.

I found it interesting, absorbing and amusing from start to finish and apparently a crowded Broadway house did likewise. They followed Doug and his travels into distant corners of the world and laughed at his numerous wisecracks. But the king-pin roar of all came with the Camel cigaret plug. The scene was a flock of Camels. Here Doug abandoned his talk and we heard the now familiar voice of Morton Downey singing his broadcast theme song; then Doug imitated the ditto famous announcer with some remarks and ended up by saying: "they generally come twenty to a pack." Wow. How they laughed at that one. (Maybe Doug found some extra revenue???)

The first thought in connection with a picture like this is: will it be "box office"? Well, there's a tough question for anyone to answer, especially if that answer must cover a general opinion of the entire country. The title has a certain fascination that may get it by in many spots, but whether the picture-goer of today will consider a subject like this enough for his money, is a horse with another tail. Of course, you could take some worth while comedy of two, three or possibly four reels and make it a darned good show without necessarily calling it a double feature. But that again depends on whether your particular patronage will take Doug Fairbanks and a travel picture as an evening's entertainment plus your surrounding program of shorts.

Its "audience" value should be undisputed. It will most assuredly entertain any audience anywhere. So it just comes down to selling them so completely in your advertising that they will know what they are going to see and be anxious to see it. That would be showselling of the highest order. But it can be done and we shall not be at all surprised to see many houses roll up healthy receipts with this one.

"THE SPECKLED BAND" brings the second of a series of Sherlock Holmes productions to this country from England. And it also brings the first characterization of this great detective by an actor of real merit who has not been instructed to make this world-famous detective of fiction a burlesque. No six-inch magnifying glass for this Sherlock. No, sir. He's a likable and entertaining character all along the line. And a great actor to boot.

Naturally, outside of the large key cities where Raymond Massey may make a stage appearance on his present American trip, there are no names to really sell, but that handicap may be overcome by intelligent merchandising on your part.

The title has a certain amount of "box office" value by reason of its detective and mystery slants and also the world famous reputation of Sherlock Holmes and Doctor Watson. That's where you must capitalize. Next, work the mystery angle as strongly as possible into your exploitation and newspaper campaign. Properly sold, it ought to do a good business for you.

"Audience" value is great. Entertaining and interesting, it holds you from beginning to end. The more you see of Holmes the more you like him, and what's more, he's so convincing as the great detective that never for a moment does he get on your nerves with silly "detecting" of the type that we all, including your audience, dislike.

OK for both the kids and Sunday showings. Fits any spot you have on your present playing policy, but in many spots will be considered excellent week end entertainment. That's up to you to decide. But don't hesitate to play it and plug Massey, especially if you've bought the rest of the series. He'll get you money if he plays your house again.

The False Madonna

(Paramount)

Drama

(Seen in Hollywood)

With a simple, wholesome story convincingly told, and particularly good performances by Kay Francis and a boy named John Breeden, "The False Madonna" is one of the most attractive releases of the season from Paramount. And it offers ample evidence that Miss Francis has a depth and power which should lift her far above the commonplace "vamp" roles so often given to her.

Adapted by Arthur Kober and Ray Harris from a story called "The Heart Is Young" by May Edginton, this picture tells how a group of blackmailers are foiled by the nobility and sweetness of a wealthy young blind boy who had been their intended victim. The racketeers plant Miss Francis in the boy's home, but she is so impressed by the young man's generosity and wholesomeness, even upon his deathbed, that she refuses to go through with it.

William Boyd does a satisfying "heavy" as the leader of the blackmailers while Conway Tearle is intelligent and sincere as the boy's attorney and protector. The outstanding performances by far are those of Kay Francis and John Breeden as the boy. Miss Francis plays with a fine restraint and sincerity that marks her as an actress capable of almost any sort of role, no matter how difficult. Breeden does the difficult business of appearing to be blind, but fighting bravely against his affliction, in a manner which brings many an honest tear to the eyes of the audience. We look forward to seeing him again.

Stuart Walker directed. Especially noteworthy was his adroit handling of the boy's death scene. There were no heroics, but it was most powerful in its brevity and simplicity.

Produced and distributed by Paramount. Directed by Stuart Walker. Story by May Edginton. Adaptation by Arthur Kober and Ray Harris. Dialogue by Arthur Kober. Photographed by Henry Sharp. Release date, December 5, 1931. Running time, 68 minutes.

The Greeks Had A Name For Them

(United Artists)

Comedy-Drama

The censors must be Sam Goldwyn's only fear as far as the fate of "Greeks" is concerned. Certainly on no other ground can I conceive this astute fashioner of pictures being apprehensive with respect to his newest screen creation. With the exception of one situation that's rather too steamy with sexy suggestion, the entire reelage is within bounds.

Nothing smarter has been done in Hollywood. I've heard that Lowell Sherman and Ina Claire did a lot of verbal clawing while "Greeks" was being made. If they did more, more power to them; it doesn't show in their work. Unless possibly they got so mad at each other that each was determined the other shouldn't completely steal the picture. Give us more of this baneful and invidious rivalry if the results are so pleasantly flavored. Ina is at her clever best, far superior to the Ina you saw in "Rebound" and "The Royal Family." She may be called the star, but she doesn't by any means pilfer the mike and camera from Madge Evans and Joan Blondell. There was a shot or two in which the camera was a bit candid and one could perceive easily enough that Madge and Joan were making mud pies when Ina was making hay on Broadway—but her beauty, her wit, her sparkle, the fine verve of her acting make you forget that.

The role of David Manners was subsidiary to the others, but David acquitted himself with distinction—a handsome fellow of pleasingly cultured diction quite adequate for his job and doubtless capable of bearing up well under far heavier responsibilities.

If the censors anywhere take too many liberties with this tangy and diverting comedy it will be too bad. Unfortunately there are pursy people who fear the downfall of a nation's morals when a girl partially disrobes in front of the camera—the same sort of folks who train glasses on Greta Garbo's sunbaths. Bright, clean wit saves "Greeks"—with the exception of that one touch of scarlet. Smart lines smartly put over. Slick and effortless perfection of performance. Story values are slight and the general effect is a little episodic, but it has speed, high elan, and the dramatic quality of constant and reiterated surprise.

Considering the rapidfire dialogue, sound recording is of a high order. There are several unusual camera shots and the mounting throughout is lavish, quite in keeping with the high quality of production values that Mr. Goldwyn has taught us to expect from him.

Produced by Samuel Goldwyn. Distributed by United Artists. Based on stage play, "The Greeks Had a Word for It," by Zoe Akins. Directed by Lowell Sherman. Adaptation by Sidney Howard. Cinematography by George Barnes. Settings by Richard Day. Film editor, Stuart Heisler. Sound, Jake Noyes. Release date, February 13, 1932.

Corsair

(United Artists)

Drama

A novel tale, though fantastic, is this story of highjacking on the high seas, with Chester Morris as the college football star who turns highjacker to prove to a Wall Street boss that he has the "guts" to acquire money in a sufficiently unscrupulous manner.

A rather crowded house at the New York Publix Rialto seemed rather completely to enjoy the bootlegging yarn with its novel twist, and left the house appearing to have been well entertained.

Opposite Chester Morris plays Alison Loyd, whose previous screen name may be better recalled, the Thelma Todd of Hal Roach's comedy group. She becomes here, as a major vehicle feminine lead, a willowy, attractive, smartly dressed and altogether prepossessing miss who falls in love with Morris, then torments him by her seeming coldness and indifference until the audience is goaded into exclamations of "Why doesn't he slap her."

When stern-visaged Morris leaves the football field a hero, Alison, daughter of a Wall Street chief, Emmett Corrigan, is much taken with him, though she expresses herself by baiting him at every opportunity. She manages to get him a job in her father's office, but he leaves him and her in a huff of righteous indignation when he is ordered to fleece a poor woman. Stung by the taunts of the father, he, with the assistance of Frank McHugh, wealthy classmate, who incidentally contributes much of the comedy to the piece, outfits a gun-carrying yacht with former college men and takes himself a-highjacking.

He chooses for prey the rum ship of Big John, played by Fred Kohler, and periodically raids the ship, taking its cargo by force. Having learned the trade from a bootlegging gangster, he does well in partnership. It so happens, as he is aware, that Big John is being financed by Alison's father, and proceeds to sell his stolen cargoes to their rightful owner, at an exorbitant figure.

Big John sets a trap in the form of a cargo of bomb-filled cases, and it so happens that on the particular final trip Alison is a stowaway. The cargo is taken, and the Corsair's crew escapes as the warning is given just in time. They board the rum ship in a rush of retaliation, but again Big John is prepared. About to do away with the whole lot in an unusual manner, a ruse, staged by Frank McHugh, turns the event and Morris sets the bootleggers adrift in open boats. He forces Corrigan to take the cargo at double the price named, then tears up the check, proving his magnanimity and the fact that he could handle a tough job. The boss offers him a good job, and Alison admits that she really did not mean all her taunting ways, but loved him from the first. Morris takes a novel way of proving his worth to girl and father, but it is at least an entertaining way, to judge by the Rialto audience.

Produced and distributed by United Artists. Directed by Roland West. From the novel by Walton Green. Adaptation by Josephine Lovett. Art director, Richard Day. Cameraman, Ray June. Sound, Frank A. Maher and Roger Herman. Editor, Hal C. Kern. Release date, November 28, 1931. Running time, 75 minutes.

A House Divided

(Universal)

This is the life of Seth Law, killnetter, who owns his own house and his own boat, and wrests the salmon from the sea and whatever he wants from every one. So it is altogether fitting that Seth Law's stormy life should be dissolved in a stronger storm than even he can evoke, when the sea is lashed and torn as by giants.

The achievement of William Wyler, who directed, was considered a worthy effort. The storm motif augments in the little seaside cottage where dwell the turbulent Seth, his gentle son whom he holds in contempt, and Seth's young mail-order wife, until at last, when the crash comes in the lives of the three inside, it seems inevitable that outside the midnight should crash in tempest, that winds should shriek and waves lash the land. The pace of the drama increases gradually, the tension heightens with each scene the director builds into his picture, until breaks the tragic climax as breaks a storm after many hints and long brooding.

Walter Huston, it was agreed, creates a living character in Seth Law, making of him an individualist. Definitely does Huston live the part. Helen Chandler is the young Montana farm girl who comes west to marry Seth as the result of an older woman's ad and picture in a matrimonial magazine. Miss Chandler's reading was thought delightful and she otherwise meets the requirements of the role with charm and restraint. Kent Douglass as Matt Law justifies his having been cast for the mild-mannered youth who refuses to drink whiskey and in general displeases his tempestuous sire.

John Huston wrote the dialogue, which is terse and adequate, aiding the action and never clouding the tale. There are two songs, one of them an adaptation of an old chantey and the other an original by David Brockman. Such strident and vital choruses are these that had they been continued a little longer the preview audience at the Wilshire, Santa Monica, would have joined in.

Produced and distributed by Universal. Directed by William Wyler. Story by Olive Edens. Screen play by John B. Clymer and Dale Van Every. Dialogue by John Huston. Cinematography by Charles Stumar. Film editor, Ted Kent. Sound, C. Roy Hunter. Release date, December 5, 1931. Running time, 71 minutes.

The Cyclone Kid

(Big Four)

Western

Buzz Barton in another of the Big Four western numbers, with plenty of the pep and dash which, audience reaction at the Loew's New York indicated, should have a large and direct appeal for the younger generation, and perhaps for the older western fans, as well.

Barton performs all sorts of the tricks of the western film, and some not always seen. However, that same audience gave evidence of its disbelief in some of the sequences which were definitely implausible. For example, J. P. McGowan, who directed, permits the villain to dash from a house in an effort to escape, then permits a guard who stops him, to shoot the villain dead, without so much as a breath of time to allow for the guard to think, or the audience to understand.

The story has to do with a gang with designs upon a ranch owner's property. They plan that nothing should stand in the way of their acquisition of the land, after several attempts at straight purchase fail. The villain kills the ranch owner and attempts to force the son and daughter to sell through a ruse. The son is played by Barton, and he offers such clever opposition to the villain that the latter is finally caught, and put finally out of the way.

The romantic interest, sustained by the ranch foreman and Barton's sister, is well handled and seemed to please the audience, as did the picture as a whole.

Produced and distributed by Big Four. Directed by J. P. McGowan. Supervised by Burton King. Story and continuity by George Morgan. Cameraman, Edward Kull. Technician, George S. Hutchins. Edited by Fred Bain. Release date, October 28, 1931 Running time, 60 minutes.

The Deceiver

(Columbia)

Mystery

At least three different individuals might very probably have been the guilty person in this murder mystery set behind the scenes of a Broadway playhouse, where a matinee idol, playing Othello, is dispatched via a knife in the back.

An audience at the Moss Broadway gave very close attention to this plausible and attention-holding mystery, which is rather logically solved by a police inspector in the person of Murray Kinnell. There is general interest in the setting, the backstage background, always being conducive to audience appeal, meeting the requirements in that respect satisfactory in this piece.

Lloyd Hughes plays the understudy to Ian Keith, as the matinee idol, who after receiving an anonymous threatening note in his dressing room, is found dead with a knife securely imbedded in his back. He had planned to leave for the coast that night, running out on the show.

An extra player in the show, a wealthy woman whose letters he possessed and Hughes, all are suspects. He had promised the girl he would take her with him, the woman was extremely anxious to get the letters and Hughes was suspected because his sweetheart, played by Dorothy Sebastian, had been receiving close attention from Keith in her stage role opposite him in Othello.

The property man with the show, in the person of Sidney Bracy, possesses a basket of knives which he uses during a summer act. He is in the habit of practicing with them and on occasion Hughes had handled them well himself. Lined upon the stage, all present are being questioned, by the inspector and the stupid detective who adds a bit of comedy to the piece, in the person of Dewit Jennings. Suddenly Keith's chauffeur bursts in, and when about to reveal the author of the threatening letter, is killed in the same manner that his employer had met his death. A clever ruse is devised by the inspector, and the guilty person is uncovered, as the property man whose daughter had planned to leave with Keith.

A satisfactory and usual conclusion ends the film, which, to judge by the assembled patrons, is a mystery film of the more entertaining sort. Work of the principles was considered good.

Produced and distributed by Columbia. Directed by Louis King. Adaptation by Charles Logue. From the story, "It Might Have Happened," by Stella Muni and Abem Frankel. Dialogue by Jo Swerling. Continuity by Jack Cunningham. Editor, Gene Havelick. Cameraman, Joseph Walker. Release date, December 1, 1931. Running time, 68 minutes.

The Guilty Generation

(Columbia)

Drama

Columbia offers here a gangland theme, but one slightly different from the run of the mine, where the feud of two Italian gangsters breaks upon the heads of children of each with terrific impact, marring and scarring their lives and a love, and only reaching a semi-satisfactory conclusion after machine guns and revolvers cut a swath through the lives of both families.

The film, may it be reported, gripped an audience at the Strand in New York in no uncertain measure, gripped it so that it was glad of the very meager opportunity to laugh, offered in but one or two bits of dialogue, as a means of relief from the tense and biting melodrama, which the picture was generally conceded to contain.

Leo Carrillo leads the players with a portrayal thought undeniably sincere and effective, his Italian accent ringing true throughout. Acknowledged able support was rendered by Constance Cummings, as his daughter; Boris Karloff, as the opposing gangster; Robert Young, Karloff's son; Leslie Fenton, Carrillo's son; Elliott Rothe, second son of Karloff; Emma Dunn as Carrillo's mother.

After gang shooting in New York, Carrillo takes his family, and copious bodyguard, to Florida, but matters do not end there. The feud continues, on the eye-for-an-eye principle, ending finally in the death, by rival guns, of the sons of both gang leaders. Young, the son of Karloff, who had lived in Paris most of his life, when his mother left the gangster, appears as a young architect, John Smith by name, he having disowned his father.

Carrillo stages a grand party at his Florida estate for the daughter, who is only miserable as a result of his attempts to make her happy. There she meets Young, who, discovering her identity, reveals his own. Despite the grave danger to which he is subjected, he woos and wins the daughter, Miss Cummings. As Carrillo's son dies, in vengeance for the death of Karloff's son, he tells his father the true name of Smith, architect.

Young and Miss Cummings, aided and abetted by the gangster's mother, are married and move to escape for a honeymoon, but Carrillo returns, knowing who the boy is, and plans a terrible revenge, though it will cost his daughter her happiness. The personal bodyguard of the girl, however, upsets the plan, aids their escape. Carrillo, enraged, moves to intercept them when his mother, who had long pleaded with him to cease his killing and bloodshed, kills him as he telephones orders, and thus ends a reign of terror in gangland.

Produced and distributed by Columbia. Directed by Rowland V. Lee. From the play by Jo Milward and J. Kerby Hawkes. Adaptation and dialogue by Jack Cunningham. Editor, Otis Garrett. Photographer, Byron Haskin. Sound, George Cooper. Release date, December 4, 1931. Running time, 82 minutes.

Soul of the Slums

(Action Pictures)

Drama

Action Pictures, Independent, in another of its series for the current season, offers real old-fashioned melodrama, the kind our parents used to see, so to speak. The Bowery mission in the city slums, the young criminal who goes straight, the benign director of the mission and the girl who helps the boy to see and follow the narrow path, are all present in all their glory.

The story is, naturally, simplicity itself, confining its attention almost throughout, to the mission and surrounding territory. William Collier, Jr., in the lead, is leaving prison after a seven-year stretch as the film opens. His entire thought is directed toward getting Blake, the man whom he thinks framed him into the conviction which sent him "up the river."

He leaves two pals in jail when he leaves and goes to the home of Blake. His intended victim is gone, but the girl who had lived with him, Molly, played by Blanche Mehaffey, meets him, saves him from the police who had followed him, and they strike a bargain to find work and go straight. Collier, seeking shelter at the mission, meets its owner, and becomes his helper, with Molly, in addition to the jobs they both have found.

Climax comes when Blake enters the mission as a down-and-out "breadliner." When Collier returns that night to kill Blake, the mission is blown up at the instigation of the operator of a neighboring 25-cent "hotel" and Blake is killed. The benefactor dies as a result of the explosion in a heavily sentimental climax sequence, and the conclusion shows Collier and Blanche married in the rebuilt mission, while the two prison pals, since reformed and at work in the mission, relieve the sentiment with a touch of comedy.

Produced and distributed by Action Pictures. Supervised by Ralph M. Like. Directed by Frank Strayer. Release date, November 15, 1931. Running time, 63 minutes.

Come Clean

(MGM)

Good

One of the Hal Roach-Laurel and Hardy comedy jobs and a rather funny effort. The two rescue a girl from drowning and she attaches herself to them. When they return to their waiting wives, she follows, and they have a terrible, but amusing time, trying to get rid of her. A detective appears, tells Laurel that he has won a $1,000 reward and Hardy pulls the bath tub stopper, sending Laurel out of sight down the drain.—Running time, 21 minutes.

Once A Hero

Fair

A comedy with a few good laugh spots, concerning a bank teller who unconsciously averts a robbery the day before his wedding. The thief who had been foiled goes gunning for him, but doesn't recognize him despite the fact that he is actually handcuffed to him. The burglar finally does identify his companion-in-cuffs, but then it is too late.—Running time, 19 minutes.

Kiddie Genius

(Picture Classics)

Good Novelty

A group of five child prodigies in individual skits, all talented and providing material for an unusual short number. A five-year-old pianist offers classical selections in masterly style, an eight-year-old girl acrobatic dancer, a young Al Jolson who renders "Mammy," and two brothers, a soprano and basso, do very well with operatic selections. A good number.—Running time, 9 minutes.

Across the Sea

Scenic Beauty

A Claude Fleming Romantic Journeys number, done with the aid of a Multicolor camera, and filmed in the Hawaiian Islands. Much of the natural beauty of the islands is excellently brought out photographically, and though there is comparatively little action in the short, the scenic beauties are a full compensation. This is the last of the Howard C. Brown and Curtis F. Nagel-produced series.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Travel Hogs

(Vitaphone)

Amusing

Hugh Cameron and Dave Chasen burlesque travel lectures and recount their astounding adventures on their trip when they carried a can of sardines for food. Travelogue shots show them in various spots over the globe, with rather amusing antics thrown in for good measure. Good for several fairly hearty laughs.—Running time, 9 minutes.

Puffing Your Blues Away

(Paramount)

Ordinary

Lillian Roth croons a song in a cabaret setting to one of the customers. Apparently unsuccessful, she croons again. The song is a new one, "Puffing Your Blues Away," but it is much like other songs of the same type, even as this short is very much like other shorts of the same type.—Running time, 10 minutes.

WABASH AVENUE

CHICAGO

A couple of the "boys" apparently figured it out that the theatre benefit performance receipts would come too late to buy turkey and trimmings for Thanksgiving dinner and took up the matter with Ludwig Siegel at the Lindy theatre. Under rather convincing persuasion in the form of some nice blue steel rods, Mr. Siegel and the Lindy cashier decided that perhaps the "boys" should have turkey for Thanksgiving dinner also new shoes, new hats and bright new suits on which to spill gravy.

Meetings of the entire sales office force of Warner-First National were held last week by Eddie Alperson, general sales manager, who was in town accompanied by Gradwell Sears, Western general sales manager. VOICE OF THE INDUSTRY

"Helps a Mile"

I WANT TO CONGRATULATE THE MOTION PICTURE HERALD on publishing in the November 7 issue those 15 "Box Office Champions." Such a list is invaluable to the smaller town exhibitors.

I was beginning to feel that there were not any more box office winners being made and to find 15 nice fat ones in a row, to shoot at, helps a mile. Of course, I have run a few of them, but not all. . . . Oh, boy, what if the producers could get over their Rip Van Winkle huddle and produce 52 winners! . . . Ah! we would soon be back in black ink again and feeling like regular fellows instead of, as now is the case, wondering when the sheriff is going to tack a notice on our door.

I note, too, that some of the higher-ups in production are saying the people in the U. S., outside of Hollywood and Broadway, want heart appeal, human plays, not gangster and sex stuff. . . . Am I dreaming? Can it be that some of those good old human elemental plays will come back to us again? How about Gary Cooper back in a good cowboy play? But no hastily made play like "Fighting Caravans."

One can pick out a lot of good old plays. Didn't "The Virginian" go big? However, we need, beside good stories and suitable actors, much better directors who can tell a story without ruining it, as, for instance, they ruined "Paid" in the making.

Directors seem lost when it comes to making talkies run smoothly—they seem to take bits of scenes and throw them together, hit and miss. Then, too, they forget the screen is made for action. How few plays have any action at all! Directors seem to have been attempting to give us stage talking plays—but the "canned" voice on the lips of mediocre actors does not come up to the voice and superb acting of our really best stage actors. The talker is not the medium for stage plays, but it is decidedly the medium for action movies with its own peculiar characteristics. Action, plus some talking with fine photography (more of the out-of-door kind), plus a good story and good-looking man and girl for the leads, plus a little music and bits of character comedy thrown in make good entertainment. Love, laughter, action, with human interest plot—that's what we want—but, as I said, it will take new directors or new production chiefs or both to bring this about.

Isn't it strange that RKO with all its resources and talents couldn't produce another "Rio Rita" or Fox another "Sunny Side Up"? Yes, I understand United Artists is duplicating "Whoopee" in "Palmy Days"—that is encouraging!

Well, here is hoping 1932 will see us with a lot more real attractions than 1931 gave us—big attractions are what we must have to survive.—PHILIP RAND, Rex Theatre, Salmon, Idaho.

"School and Screen" Great Help

I WISH TO THANK YOU FOR THE additional copies of your publication "School and Screen." This material is indeed of a great deal of help in connection with my work. I have been using it regularly as a part of my regular broadcast on the program of the Iowa Parent-Teachers Association.

During the coming year we are hoping to do more than we have in the past in the nature of better films and I am sure that we can use your material throughout the state quite extensively.—H. L. KOOSTER, asst. in charge, Visual Instruction Service, Ames, Iowa.

Miller to Jaysee Jenkins

FOR A LONG WHILE I HAVE FELT the impulse to sit me down to write you direct, "J. C.," telling how much I appreciate the "Colyum" and especially the comments you make on pictures. I appreciate the plain common horse sense (and that is surely a compliment, as I see so little displayed) you show in an understanding of what the exhibs really want in entertainment.

I many times wish some of the producers would give both you and me a job at any old salary, but put us in a place where we could keep some of the things out of otherwise good pictures and put other things in pictures which with just a little horse sense would be good.

Of course, I have only had about 20 years' experience and all of that in small towns, but surely right close to the public and surely well acquainted with what people really want in pictures.

It seems of little use to write any producer, as it makes no impression, but sometimes I feel like taking an ax to machines and giving up in disgust and admitting the industry will never really progress.

However, a few with the socalled horse sense will do more good by constantly asking for better pictures. Of course, I could mention many really good ones, but you know them as well as I do.

What I wanted to do when starting this letter was to extend you a very hearty invitation to come to Orofino, Idaho, when you come into the real West. I would like to know you and I promise you (though I never fish) there is the best fishing around my town in all the West, or surely as good as any place.

Also I promise you a big welcome and a subscription, too, and if you are here at the right season, a big mushroom and venison feed.

I will show you some very historical points, show you the exact spot where Lewis and Clark camped on their famous expedition and one of the best towns its size in the world, that is Orofino, meaning fine gold.

At any rate, this invitation is sincere and I am hoping we will have the pleasure of a visit from you.—J. H. MILLER, Rex theatre, Orofino, Idaho.

More Outdoor Scenes

WITH THE PUBLIC NOW MORE PICture wise than ever, it is up to the producers to forge ahead instead of behind as they are now going.

The first thing I would do is to look at the way pictures were produced five and six years ago. Screen some of them and learn a few lessons.

Then I would find that the pictures of those days had a laugh and a tear well balanced and to accomplish that I would have less talk and a fine musical background such as there was in only one scene in a George Arliss picture, "The Millionaire," which was really the most human part of the picture. I would fade the music softer and louder as required in talking scenes, and with a musical score to correspond with the action. With the help of a little sentimental music or comedy music the scenes would then touch the heart, but with a lot of blah-blah on the screen the pictures these days do not make you feel satisfied. In the silent days the music in pictures put a picture over and now the screen is doing just what the stage plays failed in: "talk," and no music and few and interior sets.

The other reason is that everybody is either saving expense in producing or mostly plain lazy. The camera and the actors should move about outside as much as they give the camera inside sets. People want to be carried away while in the theatre. They want to go along in the city streets, in the woods, in the country and in many other places too numerous to mention. People have made it their business to tell me that the pictures are too plain nowadays and too much interior and sameness.

In conclusion would say, let's have more musical background, less talk, which would leave more for the imagination, more scenes—and outside in particular.—C. V. MARTINA, Family Theatre, Mount Morris, N. Y.

J. C. Jenkins—His Colyum

Auburn, Wash.

DEAR HERALD:

Now that Wrigley and Hertz of Yellow Cab are in Paramount Publix, we assume that the girls in Hollywood will have free cab service and all the gum that they want to chew, and those two are mighty big items down in Hollywood.

Olympia

Next to Pierre, S. Dak., Olympia is the smallest capital city we have ever visited, and we have visited a lot of 'em. Counting the fishermen, the dock wallopers and the sawmill boys, she claims to have a population of 15,000, and we guess she claims enough. Olympia is located at the extreme southern point of Puget Sound and is in the heart of the lumber and fish industries of the Pacific Northwest. She has two things for which she can be justly proud. One is her beautiful new state capitol building and the other is Harold J. Murphy, manager of the three Fox theatres.

If Mr. Murphy's given name had been "Pat" or "Dennis" we'd take him to be Irish, but being "Harold" it's anybody's guess as to whether he's a Hoosier or Jay Hawker; any how, we are positive he's not a Polander. Then we are positive of another thing: he's a mighty swell guy, for he took us in hand and drove us all around the city and showed us the places of interest, including their big veneer mills, lumber mills and the capitol building. Then in the evening we watched the show for a while and then we went up to his office and went over our show experiences clear back to our kindergarten days, which took us until 1:30 A. M.

The Fox corporation has three houses in

Olympia: the Avalon (which is closed probably permanently), the Capitol and the Liberty. The Liberty is closed for the present for redecorating and refurnishing and the Capitol is the only one now in operation, and, judging from the size of it and the depression that is being felt in this Northwest country, we would surmise that it is able to accommodate all who are able to dig up the price of a first-class show. . . . We want to express our thanks to Mr. Murphy for the courtesy shown us; it is certainly appreciated.

We can't understand why they located the capitol of the state at Olympia, since it is in the extreme western part of the state; but probably it was because it was the end of the old Oregon Trail, and it might have been through the influence of Jim Bridger, but more likely it was because Tacoma and Spokane wouldn't let Seattle have it and Seattle and Spokane wouldn't let Tacoma have it and Tacoma and Seattle wouldn't let Spokane have it, and so Olympia stepped in and offered to compromise the matter by taking it herself, which showed judgment on the part of Olympia.

At Centralia we called on Mr. C. L. Gwinn, who operates the Fox theatre, and we found him a very delightful gentleman to meet. This theatre has recently been turned back to the original owners by the Fox organization after they had expended a tremendous amount of money in making it a theatre that would be a credit to a town of 100,000 population. The Fox stockholders can point with pride to this house as a monument to the organization, but a white elephant to the stockholders, for it is going to take a lot of rustling on the part of the management to meet the overhead, not to mention dividends; provided, of course, we are any judge of .conditions, which we may not be.

At Chehalis we met an old Jay Hawker in the person of Rae Peacock, who operates the Peacock theatre at that place. Rae recently came from Stafford, Kan., where he had been in the theatre business for a number of years. We called on Rae in Kansas about four years ago and he is just as Peacocky now as he was then. He says we taught him to eat huckleberry pie. When he came out here to Washington he went into a cafe one day and saw huckleberry pie on the switch list and he thought of us and what we had repeatedly said about it, so he ordered some, and he found it so good that he hasn't eaten anything but huckleberry pie ever since. That just goes to show what influence we have on these theatre boys, and if more of 'em would be guided by our advice just think of what a world this would be to live in.

Long View

Again we went to see "Seed" for the fifth or sixth time and again we want to say that Lois Wilson gave the most remarkable performance and portrayal of mother love and devotion and mother sacrifice that we have ever witnessed and—but then we won't talk about pictures.

Long View was laid out with a view of being a city of 100,000 or more, but they got their sights set too high, for, up to date, it will hustle her to scratch up 10,000.

We called to see Mr. Ripley who operates the Columbia theatre, but learned he was in a hospital in Portland, where he has been for some weeks, but is reported to be improving and is expected home soon.

The Hotel Monticello, where we are stopping, is about as fine a hotel in all its appointments as we have been in in many a day and would be a credit to any city, no matter how large. We hope it pays, but "hopes" never brought home any bacon, and this hotel is like a lot of theatres we have seen that were built on the stockholders' money: they were monuments to the builders, but tough on the stockholders' dough.

The bellhop has just brought us up a lunch with an opener and that will settle any further argument for tonight.

SOUND REPRODUCTION

The BLUEBOOK School

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 106—Describe the RCA Photophone Photo-Electric Cell. (B) Describe its current operations. (C) Name all the various important elements of RCA sound reproduction system.

Answer to Question No. 101

Question No. 101 was: (A) Describe a simple demonstration of a tuned circuit.

Through error, B, C and D of this section was a repetition of a part of question No. 100. My fault! Don't quite know how it happened, but—well, it did, and some of those answering this question made some pointed remarks—darn 'em. Many merely answered section (A) and let it go at that; also many answered all sections.

I shall set forth the names of those answering (A) correctly. They were: Lester Borst, Messrs. C. Rau and S. Evans, Messrs. Van Buskirk and Kroll, Henry Edwards, P. L. Dott, Andrew Simonson, George Thompson, Frank Oliver, Alonzo Zerach, "Bill" Doe, Bob Taylor, David Solomon, T. L. Olsen, Andy Davis, H. D. Cole, Frank Gordon, G. D. Rauston, Tom Atterbury, D. T. Wyley, J. L. Sanderson, D. Fausett, N. D. Darling, Thos. McGruder, Ben Robbins, John Williams, John Truax, Chas. L. Goldman, H. D. Schofield, Dan Cotty, Peter M. Davis, J. D. Orlander, D. Cermack, R. Channing, Henry Petersen, Frank Davis, Seymour Carroll, John H. Dagg, Larry Tipton, Pete Tolmann, Dan Singer, G. L. Doe, Jim Lane, D. Simmons, Lon Jackson, Jim Hendershot, George Davring, William D. Hotaling, Leroy Bates, Dan H. Colling, W. Bogart, F. T. Leroy, Andrew Hutchinson, John L. McKay, Jas. Lidding, D. M. Daniels, Nic Granby, Henry Akers, G. L. Doe, P. L. Toeping, Frank Burker, Ben H. Robbins, Dave Coates, H. B. Becker, N. R. Tillson, F. S. Roberts, G. Henry Burke, Dan Graves, P. R. Findley, Alex Hodson, Robert Banning, D. H. Prindley, S. Kay, Sam Goldberg, H. T. Jones, James Devoy, Pat Obrien, Phillip K. Toplor, F. D. Lott, Richard Singleton, Chas. Bassil, Harry Lidding and James Lidding, Henry Petersen, W. D. Samuels, Robert Tomlinson, G. K. Lamb, Tim Richards, L. H. Hendershot and R. Baker.

Of these the answers of Borst, Evans and Rau, Van Buskirk and Kroll, Henry Edwards, Ben Robbins, George Thompson, Nic Granby, G. L. Doe, Bill Doe, Jim Lane and David Solomon are essentially equal and very excellent.

I have selected the answer of G. L. Doe for publication. He says:

"(A) A very simple demonstration of a tuned circuit may be made with the aid of a rubber band cut in two. If the resultant strip of rubber be held at one end by the fingers, and a weight sufficient to stretch the rubber somewhat be attached to the lower end, and this weight be started bobbing up and down by an up-and-down motion of the fingers holding its upper end, if this motion be timed regularly, but very little effort will be required to maintain the up-and-down movement of the weight.

"If, however, the timing be changed in any degree, then it will be found that the rubber will give little if any aid in keeping the weight moving up and down, and unless the original timing be restored, the weight will gradually come to a stop, whereupon it will again resume its up-and-down movement in time with the new speed, unless before the weight movement is stopped the original rate of bobbing speed be resumed.

"In other words, the speed of the up-and-down movement of the weight must always be in time with the movement of the finfiers, else the band will interfere with the weight movement instead of assisting it. The mechanical arrangement described will permit of and assist in movement of a certain frequency, but will offer resistance to all other frequencies.

"A tuned electrical circuit will act in exactly a similar manner. It will offer little or no resistance to current of a certain predetermined frequency, but will offer resistance to current of any other frequency."

ON OUR WAY!

Friend Daughter and I on November 16 headed the radiator of the "Princess," our gas buggy, for New Jersey, Pennsylvania and what have you—the "what have you" meaning Ohio and other states. It is some hard job getting out of New York City nowadays. After sixty miles—no joke, but cold fact—we began to see a few of God's trees and some fields of winter wheat, but up to that time it was just one city after another, with homes, garages and so on lining all space between. Two hundred and eleven miles of climbing, descending and twisting in and over some of the most beautiful and interesting Pennsylvania country we have had the pleasure of viewing, landed us in the city of Williamsport, where live from forty to sixty thousand people, according to whom you talk with. Six theatres amuse the people with leaping, talking shadows. Two of them, the Capitol and the Keystone, are owned by Paramount-Publix. The Roxy is owned by John Barnidi, the Park by V. C. Luppert, the Rialto by Lycoming Amusement Company and the Majestic theatre by Joe Kay. These last are all, of course, independent theatres.

Later in the evening Friend Daughter ascended to the eerie heights of the Capitol projection room, where she found Chief Projectionist H. D. Helsel and Projectionist Rocco Lombardo doing excellent work, both in pictures and sound. The boys are very much pleased with their Delux Motiograph projectors, equipped with H-I arcs. The lamps are Hall and Connolly. The rest of the equipment consists of one double-deck effect projector, one double deck dissolving stereopticon and two Spot Lamps.

At the rear of the projection room was a 7,000-foot capacity film cabinet, a work bench, the amplifying panel, a wash basin and a locker. The room was well lighted (indirect). The walls were painted dark gray. A towel was hanging where it should be—beside the projector, so the men may wipe their hands when soiled without leaving their post of duty. Clean hands are very important when films must be handled.

The only fault found with the entire room was the fact that ventilation was not what it should be. The motor generator is in a room the same size as and directly below the projection room. This room has very little ventilation and its excessive temperature helps to overheat the projection room in summer. Also the motors vibrate the floor of the projection room.

The officers of the local are Secretary William Glodfelter, President Carl Krossley, Vice-president Clarence Krossley, Business Agent Harry Shettler, Treasurer Rocco Lombardo. There are 14 members in the local.

All the projectionists and managers of nearby towns were invited to the meeting. Also several of the town officials were present.

CONDUCTED BY AN EXHIBITOR FOR EXHIBITORS

Lend Me Your Ears!

THEY'RE still chuckling in and around New York about the great, powerful circuit—hereafter designated as the elephant—that controlled a certain community of this big city, until a little independent—hereafter designated as the flea—came along and decided to open a little "shooting gallery" that had been shut for several years. . . .

The flea found plenty of available product and a local situation that was a disgrace to the elephant and it's gigantic (?) organization, including many super-executives . . . (you know what super-executives are?—they are ex-managers who were fired by previous bosses and then sold themselves to another outfit for more money. . . . It's a gift . . .)

Having invested in a lease and some necessary repairs . . . installed a nice little sound equipment . . . and in every other way prepared for the opening of the now glorified shooting gallery . . . the flea suddenly found that the elephant was fifty degrees lower than a louse . . . they had gone out and bought up, with protection, all the flea's product . . . so the poor flea was getting a flock of wires from the exchanges advising him that such-and-such a picture was not available . . . yet . . . so he had to play stuff second run to the elephant's house . . .

The elephant's gigantic (?) organization was now functioning at the rate of three hundred miles an hour to kill the poor little flea, but said flea went merrily on his way and with his abbreviated overhead managed to get by with a little profit . . . but by merely opening up that shooting gallery he had compelled the elephant to give the community a decently run house and cut their admissions to what they ought to have charged right along . . .

It is now over a year since the flea opened that gallery and we still find him around the film curb booking in his little "pitchers" and smiling his well known smile. . . .

It was just another instance to prove that an elephant can be a damned sight smaller than a flea and the flea a damned sight bigger than an elephant . . .

When they coined that expression, "The Greek's Had a Word for It" they should have mentioned the Brothers Skouras as the leading characters. From reliable reports we find that managers who rang up ace records when Fox was operating the New York houses are being dropped by the Skouras' probably to make room for the many friends and relations of the incoming big shots (shots, we said).

And so the farce goes merrily on its way with each change in ownership; the various houses being bounced around first by one circuit and then the other. The only time the merry-go-round will stop its foolish racing is when these circuits go broke; and go broke they will. You can't get away from facts and fate. Running theatres on the friendship and relation plan is the bunk, and if the birds so running them had to use their own coin to buy these playthings they would soon go back to frying ham and eggs, running ice cream parlors or pressing pants.

Far be it from me to make any suggestion that will burden the theatre with additional expense, but from my own point of view, regardless of the bellyaching on the part of the national circuits, they might stretch a point this year and hand the managers a well-deserved Christmas present.

Circuits have a knack of spending an awful lot of money foolishly in the course of a year and here is a chance for them to spend some sensibly and with a definite return on their expenditure. Yes sir. Every man who is remembered by his home office this Christmas will be a far more enthusiastic worker than ever before.

Remember Mr. Circuit Chiefs; you have swamped the boys on the firing line with all sort of pep messages about keeping up business during the pre-holiday slump; you've urged him to work his fool head off to keep the house out of the red this December. Now show your appreciation with dollars and not hooey. A pat on the back is a great gag, but around Christmas the managers would like a little check to make them feel that they are not laboring for a cold-blooded or heartless outfit.

After a shake-up that left theatre managers working for Fox in a cold sweat, the presidency of that "auspicious" organization has again changed hands. Now we're keeping our fingers crossed again with a prayer on our lips that the new "power-that-be" will not have too many relations or friends to take care of.

Rumblings and nervous glances once more are holding forth in the rank and file and after all that has happened you can't blame them. But we're wishing that everything will roll along undisturbed by the new prexy and the famous morale and spirit of the Fox organization will once more predominate all along the line.

Here's hoping you don't pack too much turkey into that stomach of yours . . . we generally do ourselves and then spend the next week regretting it! "CHICK"

Elaborate Program Published By Yeoh For Malacca House

Considering the subject of programs, we wish it were practical to reproduce a sample of the kind issued by T. S. Yeoh, manager of the Capitol Theatre in Malacca, S. S. (Straits Settlement). To all appearances the publication not only functions as a program but serves as a well gotten-up magazine of movie information and as a medium for a whole lot of advertising. Also, a neat little gag is used to designate the location of "tonight's program." This is spotted about the middle of the magazine and the upper right hand corner of all pages up to this point are diagonally cut at the extreme corner, allowing enough space to print the necessary words.

Yeoh is one of the Club's new members and now we may expect to be kept posted on how shows are sold in his far-off country. He was born in Kuala Lumpur, Federated Malay States, and was educated in Malacca. His house is up-to-date in every respect and equipped with all that is latest in sound. The next time we hear from him we will expect some detailed information on the different stunts he's using to boost attendance at the Capitol.

Novel Word Stunt Arranged By Burns To Sell "Politics"

A novel word idea was used by E. J. Burns, manager of the Alhambra Theatre, Elwood, Ind., as part of the extensive campaign he made in "Politics."

Burns arranged with the Call-Leader to run the Word stunt for two days in advance of the playdate. Rewards were offered to those who sent in the words found in the advertising pages of the paper that were made from the word "Politics." An additional advance story ran the day previous to the opening, outlining the contest.

Another stunt put over by Burns, was the arrangement for the Elwood American Legion Band of twenty-eight pieces, to march to the theatre in a body and attend the first evening performance. They played in front of the theatre for about fifteen minutes before entering, and Burns also had several large political banners made up for the parade and enlisted the services of the local Ford agency for the loan of several of their new cars.

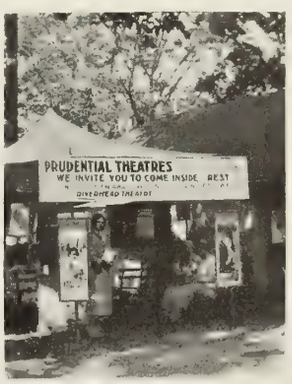
This department has already published a number of campaigns made on the above picture and is glad to add Burns' to the list. We will also be glad to pass along other examples of his exploitation efforts if he will see that these are brought to our attention. In the meantime, he has the Club's wishes for continued success.

Silverwatch Sends Another Collection Of Gags You Can Use

Max Silverwatch manager of the Strand Theatre in Amesbury, Mass., again comes through with a batch of gags used on recently played pictures, one of which appears to be a corking interest-getter. This consists of a piece of white paper, folded over and over again about twelve times. When completely folded it measures about 2½ x 1½ inches in width and is sealed with a sticker reading, "Don't Break This Seal Until You Get Home."

As one unfolds the paper the following copy appears, one fold at a time and in consecutive order: "Have Everybody Gather 'Round —Don't Get Excited—It Won't Bite—Keep On Turning—One Good Turn Deserves Another—Let Mother Have A Look—Let Father In Too—The Whole Family Ought To Look—You'll Be Tickled To Death—And your Troubles Will Be Over, If You Come To—(last two folds devoted to title of picture and name of theatre).

He is also indulging in the give-away of occasional guest tickets and in one instance offered these to people who named the leading men in Norma Shearer's last five pictures. This was done in connection with "A Free Soul." At another time he used a post-card sized card on which a person could try a hand at writing a picture title as many times as possible. To those handing in the cards, guest tickets were awarded. In addition to instructions, copy also plugged the current picture.



We also note that football angles of exploitation have not been neglected during the present season. Amesbury has a team and Max saw to it that vest picket size schedules were printed and distributed all over town. The back cover carried a plug for the theatre.

All good little gags that can be turned to profit, we predict, and that one of the folder is particularly to our liking. We venture to state that each fold will be read until the complete message is delivered. Max is a great hand for using interesting novelties and just as often as we get a line on what he's using, we'll shoot his ideas along for other Round Tablers to try out.

Whyte's Privileges At County Fair Big Aid For Prudential

Out in Riverhead, Long Island, N. Y., where W. H. Whyte manages the Capitol Theatre, the annual Suffolk County Fair is an event that attracts thousands of people from many sections of the Island. Taking advantage of this situation, and his acquaintance with the treasurer of the Fair Association, Whyte made arrangements to secure space for tents to represent his theatre and the Prudential Theatres Company for duration of the Fair.

A big sign across the top of the company tent called attention to fair patrons that the shelter was a "rest tent" and you will note from the accompanying photo that posters on current and coming attractions were displayed outside. Other advertising matter was available inside. Permission was also granted for the tacking of window cards, carrying bookings for the week, all over the grounds and in all exhibition buildings.

At his own tent, Whyte had window and insert cards on display and programs were passed out by an attendant. Tickets advertising a special give-away were also distributed. A girl usher also made herself generally useful to those who came in to rest by offering fresh drinking water, and other little courtesies.

No doubt the above did a lot toward keeping the Prudential trademark before the public eye and Whyte is to be commended for his initiative. The stunt only set him back about $10 for all privileges and much good publicity resulted from the move. Regarding Hartford, W. H.—keep your eyes on this department and we venture to state that you'll receive information from this neck of the woods from time to time. Why not drop the boys a line occasionally and maybe they'll wake up. In the meantime, best wishes and much success to yourself.

Notice to Members:

PLEASE be sure to notify the Chairman of any change of address.

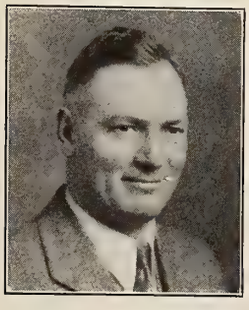
—THANK YOU.

Fred Thomas Still Batting Them Over In Winchester, Va.

Once again we've succeeded in getting a line on the showselling activities of Club Member Fred Thomas, manager of the Capitol Theatre in Winchester, Va., and once more we can assure his fellow showmen that he's been on the job with a variety of gags calculated to help sell his theatre and attractions.

When playing "Transatlantic," he went around to his favorite drug store and arranged to have a lot of stickers pasted on samples of tooth-paste. The cost of imprinting and samples was entirely absorbed by the store which, in turn, received a credit line on stickers. Stickers were also used to popularize the give-away of 100 gallons of gasoline, five gallons of oil and one tire. In this instance these were pasted on matchboxes and distributed in stores, lunch rooms, hotels, barber-shops, etc.

He used a novelty card to plug "Young As You Feel," cost of card and imprinting again absorbed by a drug store. The card was made up in the form of a doctor's prescription and the top portion read, "Dr. W. Rogers—Prescribes:" A note at the bottom instructed the reader to run a soft pencil lightly across the blank space. By doing this a hidden message will appear. Another novelty herald was also used on "Miracle Woman," the inside of folder presenting a number of magic tricks to try on friends. These gags tied up neatly with the titles. Both heralds and the trick card are gotten out by a manufacturer of various novelties and the name of this firm may be obtained by dropping a card to Club headquarters.



In connection with "Alexander Hamilton," he used a book cover gotten out by one of the leading book cover companies for distribution in the schools. This is a nifty little gag for any theatre in that the company supplies these already imprinted with space for ad of theatre and picture. The covers are adjustable to any size text book and Thomas found that the distribution of 1,000 of these within a radius of 25 miles gave excellent circulation to the message he wished to get over. He has found distribution by teachers to be the best method, as each teacher will explain to students the educational value of the picture.

Other publicity matter recently used by Thomas included a roto herald issued for "American Tragedy"; announcement herald on new policy, dropped from an airplane; a guest ticket herald on "Silence," paid for by a merchant; another guest ticket tie-up with Lux for 2,000 heralds, paid for by company, and a monthly-calendar tie-up with banking institutions, at no cost to theatre. These calendars are placed in every home in Winchester and mailed to other towns within a radius of 25 miles.

As usual, Thomas is getting away with a large amount of free advertising, which means that he's doing quite a bit of salesmanship in and around his town. If there are any details about the above gags that are not fully understood, we'll be glad to explain further. In the meantime, we will await other information concerning this active showman.

ROUND TABLE BIOGRAPHIES

Arthur Glen Miller's experience in show-business dates back to when he was 18 years of age. At this stage of his career he started as an electrician with the Walter Savidge Carnival Company (how Savidge used to pack 'em in the old black top, Arthur observes) and he continued in this field for some time, northern Nebraska having no theatres at this time.

Arthur G. Miller

He then took a turn in the business of selling film, but after being fired for turning in more contracts than any other salesman, he decided that he would be his own boss and gave his attention to the operation of a tent picture and vaudeville show through the northern section of his state. At this point, the Great War got off to a flying start and Miller chose to take his chances of being pot-shot as an artillery observer in the blimp division of the Signal Corps. He enlisted at Fort Omaha and was commissioned at Arcadia, Calif.

The Boches didn't get him, however, and after Armistice he returned to the States and his old game. He bought the feature, "Flashes," and roadshowed it over five states, tying up with the American Legion and, as he observes, made plenty of sugar for all concerned. Then he took a turn with a show in Wyoming during the oil boom, prior to returning to his home country to promote construction of a new theatre building in Atkinson, Neb., where he is at present intrenched. He draws from a radius of 75 miles and states that business IS GOOD.

Pass Around the Bottle and Let's All Take a Drink!

Bennett's 14 Year Old Stunt Suitable For Use Right Now

Fourteen years ago a big fire completely destroyed a manufacturing plant out in Muncie, Ill., and threw nearly 500 men out of employment. Other business concerns carried on as usual but wages were only nominal and insufficient to take care of the void created by loss of the factory. Christmas was but a few weeks off and held promise of nothing short of famine for a lot of poor families . . . and so A. E. Bennett, manager of the Liberty Theatre in Muncie, cooperating with other charitably inclined citizens, jumped into the breach and saved the situation with a Good-Will Show.

A. E. BENNETT

What was done 14 years ago will hold good this Winter, so it won't do any harm to jot down a brief resume of a story that appeared in the January 17th issue of the old Motion Picture News.

It may be interesting to some of the veteran showmen in this business to read over the titles of the pictures picked in connection with this especially arranged program for youngsters and grown-ups. There was, "Heart of a Hero" (World Film); Bessie Barriscale in "A Corner in Colleens" (Triangle); and "The Unwelcome Mother," a William Fox feature. The price of admission was some article of food for the distressed families and to quote from the story, "it would have brought tears of genuine happiness to your eyes if you could have seen two hundred or more boys and girls coming into the theatre every afternoon for a week, all laden with things which would gladden the hearts of the poor and unfortunate. The kids went about their part in a wholehearted manner, it never becoming evident that all they were thinking of was a free show."

On the final day of the show, when a huge pile of all kinds of food-stuffs had been collected for distribution to the poor, it was announced by the theatre management that another free show would be given every kid who had participated in the drive for food. This was arranged through the courtesy of the old Triangle Film Corporation.

This Winter Relief Association, as it came to be known, was a big success for all concerned. There's going to be need this Winter for the same kind of relief and so it appears to us that Bennett's fourteen-year-old stunt is a timely suggestion.

Larmour Cashed In At Start Of Season With Football Nite

In line with activities indulged in by showmen during the Football Season, we note that M. W. Larmour, manager of the National Theatre in Graham, Tex., got off to a flying start at the beginning of the season by putting on a "Football Night" for the coaches and players of the local team. The event was advertised in the newspaper and respectively announced in both high school and theatre by principal and screen.

As the featured picture ended on the occasion of this guest night a huge football appeared on the screen (slide). The draw curtains closed, football still on, and the figures 1931 appeared in center of football (another slide from another machine) the slide was as large as the screen and as the curtains opened, the slide faded. At this point the master of ceremonies appeared and introduced the coaches and players, one at a time. Following this, it was announced that it would be the theatre's policy to pass the entire squad to the show every time a game was won. About twelve minutes time was used to get this stunt over.

So far this season the team has won five games and lost one. Prior to entering the auditorium, the squad assembles in the lobby and they are escorted to an allotted section as a unit. They do appreciate the courtesy and business has been better than usual as the result of this move, for it is talked about that Larmour is lending support to the team. Next year he intends to elaborate on the idea by bringing them to the theatre with more ceremony. He will arrange with some prominent local people to give short talks, give the affair a better staging and work out a stronger campaign.

Holden Took Swat At Depression With "Palmy Days" Co-op

Merchants down in the sunny South are not afraid to come across for the promotion of a double truck based on "Palmy Days" in business, according to a sample of one instigated by Earle Holden, city manager for Sparks houses in Ocala, Fla. The copy across the top of the accompanying cut speaks for itself and you will note that the entire copy is aimed to take a swat at this so-called depression; in fact, everything about it is "palmy." Also note that the Dixie Theatre came in for a generous slice of space at no cost to house. Another noteworthy feature of this co-op was the insertion of "Palmy Days—are here—Buy Now" cuts on every page of the paper, a fine boost given both ad and picture by the newspaper.

Eddie Cantor Says "Enjoy 'PALMY DAYS' Buy Now!"

We believe most Round Tablers will agree that the co-op pictured here is a fine example of what can be done when a smart manager puts his shoulder to the wheel. It will be noted that a great many merchants contributed to the promotion of this ad and that in addition, the paper helped matters along by plugging the stunt on each page with a special cut made solely for the occasion. However, Holden is always on the job wherever he may be and if you will keep your eyes peeled, you'll soon be able to get the dope on how he organized a Safety Club in Ocala. This will probably appear in a week or so.

EDITOR'S NOTE: Managers who contemplate any form of contest, prize competitions or schemes of any kind in connection with which the mails are to be used are advised to ascertain whether such matter is admissable to the mails in view of the fact that the postal laws prohibit the mailing of matter relating to schemes or enterprises for the award of prizes or distribution of money or property by lot or chance, drawings, guessing contests, lucky number contests, etc., and should submit to their local postmaster details and full particulars of such schemes in order to avoid violation of the lottery laws.

Cigarette Ad Gave Burgess Big Break In Newspaper Plug

Watch your newspapers for the big cigarette ads that the big tobacco companies are running these days, advises G. Harold Burgess, assistant manager of the Strand Theatre, Amsterdam, N. Y., and see if the ads happen to be featuring an endorsement of some star who may be playing in one of your current shows. Then make haste to tie-up with the situation by inserting your own ad right alongside.

This was exactly what happened to this Round Tabler when he recently observed an ad in a Schenectady paper featuring Jack Holt in Lucky Strike copy, his picture being "A Dangerous Affair." The ad appeared first in the morning paper and broke in the local paper the same evening.

That was fast work, Burgess, and you were certainly Jonnie-on-the-Spot when it came to taking advantage of the situation. True, it might not happen again for a long, long time; but, at any rate, it's evidence that you were using the old "bean." Now that you've broken the ice with your first contribution, don't let it be the last one. We'll gamble that you will have other mighty good ideas to send along.

Fred S. Meyer Made Effective Tie With Large Drug Concern

Forty thousand piece of stage money were printed and placed in all packages going out from the twenty-five Walgreen Drug Stores in Milwaukee. On one side was printed "Get a fresh box of Kupfer's Chocolates at Walgreens." On the other, "Learn how to get rich quick without breaking the law by seeing 'The New Adventures of Get-Rich-Quick Wallingford' at the Alhambra theatre." Fred S. Meyer, theatre manager.

Special photos of a girl serving a "Leila Hyams Sundae" were enlarged to a 16 x 20 size and displayed in drug stores.

A slanguage contest was used in which free tickets were given away. This ran for two days in advance of the opening and was given plenty of space in the newspapers.

Purse stills were used in jewelry stores in an effective publicity stunt. The theatre made all the signs for these stills.

Ten thousand vitamin cards, each bearing an announcement of the picture, were given away at the Wintergarden Cafe, and more than seven thousand were given away in the theatre. Their window was used for a special display of William Haines.

Circulation of 50,000 pieces of advertising matter at no cost to theatre cannot be laughed off by anyone and this is further evidence that Meyer is a darn good salesman. Keep up the good work, Fred, and let the Club hear from you just as often as you can find an opportunity to shoot along some information.

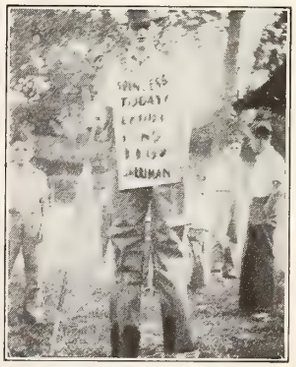
CHRISTMAS CANDY FOR THE KIDS! DAY-BEFORE-XMAS SHOWS!



A great gag and one that costs you very little. Make a deal, either locally or through the nearest wholesale distributor, for assorted Xmas candies. Put a small quantity into imprinted paper bags and hand them out to the youngsters starting the day before Christmas, or whenever you think it's O. K.

This same idea can be utilized to plug a special kiddies' show on the afternoon before Christmas. Have someone dressed as Santa Claus and he can hand each youngster a toy or novelty. These items are available through Club headquarters at very low cost and you can take the worst theatre-day in the year and make it show a substantial profit.

Parents will be tickled to get the kids off their hands on the afternoon of the 24th and you should have a sell-out without any trouble. Just get behind the idea and see that they all know about it. Distribute circulars around the school and use a peppy trailer telling the children that Santa Claus will be at your theatre on the afternoon of the 24th to meet the kiddies and distribute toys, candy and novelties FREE to all.

Bevel Used Stilt Stunt Effectively As Plug On "Daddy"

When "Daddy Long Legs" was played by L. W. Bevel, manager of the Princess Theatre in Harriman, Tenn., he found that a boy on stilts made a most effective ballyhoo for this picture. The boy was used in conjunction with a truck bally which circulated through the surrounding towns, the boy riding the truck to the towns and doing his bit on the streets while the truck worked the outskirts. The small photo will show how cards bearing copy on theatre and picture were suspended in front and on the back of the bally. Still another photo we have on hand amply testifies to the hit this stunt made with the kiddies of a nearby town, a crowd of them being clustered around the make-believe "Daddy."

We are also presenting evidence by photo that Bevel is well acquainted with local fire department officials. The picture shows the city fire truck which was used to sell the first chapter of the serial "Hero of the Flames." Note the banners on sides that plugged the title and if you will glance at the lower right you'll be able to make out L. W. himself leaning against the truck.

This Round Tabler also does all art and poster work for his theatre and while we have some small snap-shots of work he did in connection with "New Show Year," these will not reproduce sharp enough to do real justice to his displays. But from what we can see it's a cinch that many other members will be able to get some corking ideas for dressing their theatres and we will look forward to receiving some larger photos that will bring out all the interesting details. We've presented other examples of Bevel's work in the past and we hope he will not forget to send along more during the present season. His poster work will also be a distinct contribution to this particular department.

THERE IS "DOUGH" IN DECEMBER!

Seasonable Activities Can Make This One Of Your Best Months!

In presenting this article from E. S. C. Coppock we feel that it is timely in that it not only offers some unusually good slants on business promotion, but is also directed primarily at December and its attendant weakness at the box office. Coppock mentions a sufficient assortment of his activities to make it appear that the December "slump" can be avoided through intelligent showselling and careful attention to costs. We recommend his article to every showman who feels that his business is going to be hurt this December.

Consider the Costs—

From time to time during economy periods in the year, certain advertising efforts will often be referred to as "costless selling," but I feel that an analysis of all selling activities will show that there is a cost, possibly not of money, but of time and effort.

Most of us are familiar with the time-honored efforts and methods of cooperative advertising that gets the money from the other fellow in return for our furnishing the theatre and I don't believe that a great deal of time should be spent in a discussion of this type of exploitation. The Profit and Loss sheet at the end of the week is going to reflect more intelligent operating as more thought is given to the pro-ration of necessary expenditures in your standard items of advertising and exploitation.

Is December a Bugaboo?

December always has, and probably always will be, a bugaboo to you showmen. You are as familiar as anyone with the reasons why the people are not coming to your theatre, so let us discuss for a few moments the way to meet that opposition.

Money spent with the assurance of no return is absolutely wasted. Consider each of your mediums and it is my suggestion that your paid-for devices become strictly informative or carry a directory message. Most newspaper contracts carry a clause stating a minimum space that can be used for one month. Certainly, no month in the year better deserves a trimming in newspaper space than December.

Large and expensive art work in lobbies and on fronts has a questionable effect toward the increase of business during this period. Using, for example, the Staten Island Paramount Theatre, we have broken down all our advertising activities into their proper classifications, as: Screen, lobby, front, newspaper, posting, trains and street cars and ballyhoo, window displays and miscellaneous printing. We are checking off the cost of window displays entirely because we find that they can be secured gratis as a feature of some cost-less exploitation to be discussed later in this article.

Dispell that idea that December business MUST be rotten. It can be a mighty peppy month if the theatre manager makes up his mind that he won't be licked by this theatrical bugaboo. Many opportunities for stimulating business are at the disposal of every showman. All you need do is to plan a month of business-getting activities and then put them over with real "costless" selling. That this is possible has already been proven beyond dispute. Many spots that heretofore were "dead" for two weeks before Christmas, now boast of record December receipts because they realized that this month is pregnant with many angles not available during other seasons of the year. So, if you have the "guts" to tackle your community for profits this month you may be surprised and delighted to find that there is plenty of extra money waiting for the man who knows how, or will at least listen to some ways of getting it.

Spending and Saving!

When deciding whether to discontinue either posting or cards in trains and in street cars, we decided in favor of continuing posting as in this particular locality a very large percentage of automobiles will operate throughout the entire winter. However, our posting is being confined to 60 block 6-sheets, a 2-color job at a 1-color price by having color divisions come on sheet divisions. I am convinced that this is the ideal paper for any house on a split week policy. The top part or the top two sheets carries the name of the theatre and dates. The left two bottom sheets carry in block type the attraction for the first half of the week in one color, and the right half two bottom sheets carry the attraction for the last half of the week in a contrasting color.

We find that locations can be secured for such a piece of paper and stands and sniped that could not be secured for a 24-sheet and in places where a one-sheet would be absolutely ineffective.

In discontinuing our mailing list for this period, our final mailing carried a box asking patrons to refer to the amusement page of the daily newspaper which carried our display ads and readers. The wording of such a paragraph is important.

Single Column Advertising!

In reducing our space in the newspaper to ads of 8 or 10 inches, we find that we are able to secure a great deal more attention value by using tall 1-column ads rather than square 2-column ads. The many tricks of lay-out and border that are available in 1-column composition are good attention devices and the height of a 1-column ad carries your message a great deal further up on the page than a small 2-column ad, buried under a grocery store sale.

It so happens that the anniversary of this theatre came during a period when we were trying to effect economy. It is certainly an occasion for the expenditure of more effort than usual and determining on the elaborate front shown in the accompany picture, we felt it justifiable in that the front was so constructed that all lettering and posterized heads were cut out and tacked to the large neutral background. In the interval of 8 weeks between the time of our anniversary and the first of the year, this same front can be re-erected for big pictures at a negligible cost because it is merely necessary to recoat the background and tack on new cut-outs, lettering, heads and designs.

In the solicitation of merchants for cooperative tie-ups wherein the merchant in the end will pay the entire cost, the most important feature is the approach and explanation to the merchant of the conditions of the tie-up. Most merchants are in a worse financial condition than you are, and they are ready to welcome the suggestion that will give them a place in your theatre, because they realize that whatever spending population there may be in your town is composed of the people who patronize theatres.

Don't Let the Holidays Scare You—Tie Your Plans Right To Them!

A very simple little stunt is described herewith: Cards were distributed with copy referring to a guessing gag in the window of a shoe store. In return for having our employee distribute 5,000 of these cards through the neighborhood; in stores and to out-going patrons, the merchant paid for the printing, furnished the shoes and paid a window trimmer to decorate his window with material referring to our show.

Another simple "no money cost" device is the football score card. The one illustrated was paid for in its entirety by the cooperating merchant because we relieved him of the problem of distribution by having two of our ushers give them out at the game, and we provided him with a novelty device for exploitation. The score card was oval in shape.

Merchants Want to Co-operate

In the operation of their stores, most merchants are not alive to the exploitation possibilities of their own merchandise or their own business, and if a clever medium or stunt can be presented to them in a cooperative manner, avoiding by all means anything that would appear as solicitation, the merchant as a rule will appreciate the suggestion, as few of them have any knowledge of exploitation.

Of course, at this time of year, it is generally acknowledged that the most effective no cost advertising for a theatre is the idea involving no work or "gray matter" on the part of the contestant.

A tie-up with the jewelry store was simple to effect in that the store was a new concern in the neighborhood and needed to get their name before a large number of people in the buying class in the shortest time and at the least expense. They appreciated the fact that a stunt in the theatre would eliminate the competition and division of attention that is present in newspaper advertising. They

We will assume that whatever money you spend will be spent sensibly. Just because there is no expected slump in business is no reason to go out and throw money around like an idiot. Be a business man all year 'round and watch every cent you spend. Think twice before you enter into any sort of a contract or agreement involving your theatre's money. Think three times before you launch any campaign that may result in large expenditures of money on the part of the theatre. Practice "costless" selling by getting the merchants or any others tied into your activities, to pay for all the printing or advertising. You are giving them plenty when you line your theatre up behind any sort of an idea. But the most you should "spend" is your brain power to cultivate the idea and put it through successfully. It sounds rather foolish to tell managers to be careful during December. Are they to assume that they don't have to be careful the rest of the year?

BUT YOU HAVE TO GO AFTER IT!

Many Valuable Slants Are At Your Disposal If You Want Them!

furnished $300 worth of valuable presents and also provided a display case so that these items might be shown in the lobby. They printed 20,000 coupons and paid a window trimmer to decorate their window with the theatre's message.

The nature of the coupons themselves is important. It carries the bookings for the theatre for a period of ten days which means that the people, after having received their first coupon and showing it at home, are reminded of the coming attractions.

In the case of the jewelry tie-up the patrons were asked to write their name and address in order that the jewelry store might obtain a mailing list.

A very similar coupon was used on a tie-up with a radio store that was also effected at absolutely no money cost to the theatre. The presents listed have a total value of $250, and the opportunity of securing something of such value for nothing cannot help but appeal to people in times such as these.

On all of the tie-ups mentioned no screen credit was given to the merchant. Their credit in the theatre consisted merely of a display in the lobby with an easel or set piece, made at the cost of the merchant, explaining the contest.

The advisability of having the awards on an off or poor night is immediately apparent. That's why its a good idea for the theatre.

Children—A Screaming Ballyhoo!

During times such as the December slack period, one of the finest approaches in interesting people in theatre attendance is through children. By some means or other, get children into the theatre, either by a tin can matinee, a toy matinee, potato matinee or whatnot. After they are in the theatre, speak to them from the stage or through your public address system regarding interesting facts on your coming attractions or your next attraction. Be enthusiastic yourself and you will find it a simple matter for them to catch your enthusiasm, and everyone of these children will leave the theatre a screaming ballyhoo for your attractions. Their own desire to see your next show will be conveyed to their parents.

For theatres having kiddie clubs you will find that most toy or hardware dealers would appreciate a display in your lobby in return

These two pages of "December Activities" were assembled for the purpose of spurring you on to greater efforts than you may have thought of. We are firmly convinced that this particular month need not be "bugaboo" to any theatre providing that man running that theatre has the nerve to tackle it with a determination that it must be a profitable month by all means. Develop that determination and see how much inexpensive merchandising, plus novel holiday ideas, you can inject into your plans. Each added slant will further convince your patrons that they can use that entertainment and relaxation your theatre has to offer. Get busy. There are plenty of profits in December.

DECEMBER BUSINESS BUILDERS!

Special Toy Matinees for the youngsters offer tremendous possibilities for increasing receipts and sending hundreds of kiddies out raving about your shows.

Gala special performances for all institution kiddies. Arrange for them to assemble at one end of town and march in parade formation to the theatre. Use Boy Scout or other bands. Police escort. Banners and flags. A tremendous good-will gesture on the part of the theatre. Possibly the merchants will donate candy, etc., to be given to each youngster.

Don't play away from good pictures during December. A "box office" production will get you money regardless of the time of the year. If your December booking are stronger than usual you stand an excellent chance of coming through with a record-breaking month of big business. Play up your attractions and your patrons will come out just as they do at any other time of the year.

Spend sensibly and carefully. Don't waste newspaper space or other advertising angles. Use every cent with a view of getting maximum results from your efforts and your money. Try new ideas in your exploitation. Organize a wide-covered area for house-to-house distribution of some special circular or herald. Give them something new in your method of show-selling.

* * *

Line up several benefit shows for the week before Christmas. The organizations selling the tickets will help swell your volume of December business, and besides, it will bring out a lot of folks who do not attend theatres regularly.

Benefits, Kid Shows and Midnight Matinees, Yours For the Asking!

for the donation of a good bicycle to a member of your club. Such a stunt will be worked in this theatre concluding on the Saturday before Christmas. Arrangements have been made whereby the bicycle dealer will again bear all of the expense.

Tieing in with Unemployment Relief!

Merchants in most communities are assisting toward the relief of unemployment by giving coupons representing from 2 to 10% of the purchase. These coupons are deposited in some prominent place and are periodically gathered by the committee for Unemployment Relief and taken to the banks where they are changed to cash against the account of the merchants issuing the coupons. This cash is used for the relief of unemployment.

Now comes the theatres' part. The place where these coupons are deposited must be in your lobby and in addition to that try this plan: To give the coupons further value and to make purchasers ask for them from the various merchants, secure gifts of comparatively small value that will be awarded from your stage. Persons depositing the credit coupons in the barrel in your theatre sign their names on the backs which simplifies the awarding of Gifts in that coupons are drawn from the barrel one evening each week and the winners can be identified by their names on the backs of the coupons.

Benefit Shows Are Profitable!

I am presenting only a few sure-fire devices that have either been used or are now working. In concluding these suggestions let me remind you that nearly all large organizations at Christmas time are seeking funds to help the needy. Why not approach these organizations on the idea of a benefit theatre party wherein they could use their percentage towards the creation of a fund for the needy? The amount of percentage that you give such organizations is entirely a local problem and I feel that to make specific suggestions in the regard would be an affront against your ability, but it is our experience that the combined Boy Scout troops, the Elks and the Foresters each year arrange a theatre party of over 2,000 persons each. What could be nicer for the week before Christmas than two or three big theatre parties?

Photo above shows front referred to in story, whereby background was re-coated and new cut-outs, letters and designs were tacked on a number of times at negligible xpense.

THEATRE POSTER ART!

Drawn by HERB SIMPSON

This week Herb Simpson of Evansville, Ind., joins the poster artists who are contributing to this fine series of theatrical poster art. Which gives our good friend, and steady contributor, Benton James, a chance to catch his breath between posters. Others will also help make this series still more valuable and interesting and there is just a chance that with the proper number of artists sending in the posters, and with material of the kind that others are constantly looking for, we may devote a full page to the doings and art work in his field. Articles, as well as posters, would be appreciated from those who understand this type of work. They can be artists or managers who have had experience in making up layouts and designs.

Jack Wright Using School Deportment Card With Success

A little courtesy gag is being used by Jack Wright, manager of the Grand Theatre, Fort Stockton, Texas, that is clicking along very nicely. It's a deportment card and he works it among the lower grades in the public schools, using it in one room each week and making it go the rounds several times per year. The copy on the card reads, "Courtesy Ticket—Given to you for attaining 100 per cent in Deportment for the week ending .....19.. and will admit you to the Grand Theatre Free on Saturday ..... 1931. Given you through Courtesy of OK Theatres. Signed, ... Teacher.

It's plain to see that by working the lower grades, Wright is directing his message to children of an age when they are quite apt to be accompanied by a parent when attending the theatre, at least he states that this happens ninety per cent of the time. In addition, it's a good-will builder with parents, teachers and the kiddies. And so it would seem to us.

The last time we heard from Jack he was not only busy with a lot of show-stunts but was up to his neck with the staging of an impending matrimonial event for himself. We're mighty glad to know that he's still able to carry on and will watch out for further contributions to this department.

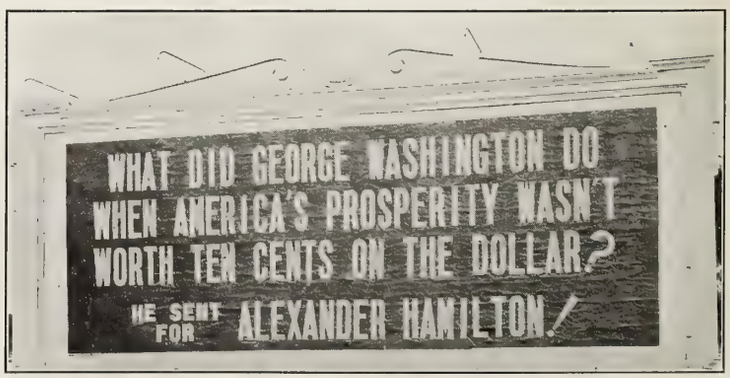
Jack Pfeiffer Now Running Own House In Northern Wisc.

As we write of Jack Pfeiffer, former manager of Warners' Orpheum Theatre in Hammond, Ind., he is up in the northern end of Wisconsin where he went the early part of this month to take over operation of his own theatre. However, prior to leaving his old stand he pulled a few little gags that helped trade along and here they are:

A couple of heralds testify that he was specializing on kiddie trade over a period, one of them plugging a pie-eating contest, with prizes for the winners and free candy bars for everybody; and the other presenting an especially arranged program for the youngsters. Cost on the former was taken care of with a small credit line allotted to a coffee shop; the latter offered a special inducement for the kids to win a prize by bringing the hand-bill to the box office. The bulletin board guest ticket gag was also used.

Two other tie-ups made with a clothing concern also aided the box-office. One was in the form of a ticket and stub issued for the give-away of a new silk dress, conducted in the usual manner, and the other a miniature week's program, with coupon attached that was good for a $2 credit on a $20 purchase.

The next time you hear about Pfeiffer we're sure he will have other interesting news to pass along. It's always a pleasure to record that some Club member has stepped out for himself and we know that every Round Tabler wishes him much success with his new venture. A word or two about his old kiddie club before we sign off. On the first Sunday he started it the house played to over 800 kids and 300 adults, during a rain that started at nine in the morning and lasted all day. Not so bad, you'll all agree.



Results Show That P. Bloomberg Knows Newspaper Can Aid

Additional evidence of productive cooperation between the local newspaper and P. D. Bloomberg, manager of the Capital Theatre, Salem, Mass., can be seen by glancing at a recent issue of his town paper, in which he received a nice front page break of a four-column cut on the occasion of the visit of Ken Hackley and his Radio Cowboys. And that's not all by any means; he also worked up a full-page co-op among the radio dealers, tying up with the fact that the Hackley band was a popular radio feature.

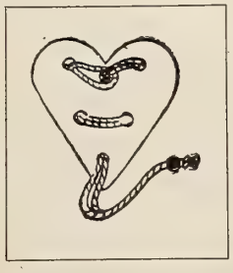
The newspaper also cooperated with him to the extent of distributing 1,000 copies of the paper on a Sunday night and the co-op further netted two free radio broadcasts over a local station, both lasting for a half-hour. Of course, these were taken care of by the Hackley group of players. Window displays were also obtained from each merchant in the tieup.

Which all goes to show what a newspaper can do to help the good work along. Treat one in the right way and in nine cases out of ten it will come through with the sought for assistance. In other words, Bloomberg has found out the real meaning of "co-op," which is a fifty-fifty break all around.

A SPECIAL TWENTY-FOUR SHEET!

In addition to many other special advertising stunts made on the occasion of the opening of Warner Bros. new Western Theatre in Hollywood, Calif., the theatre staff got out a special 24-sheet on the opening attraction, "Alexander Hamilton." It's almost unnecessary to state that conditions made the above copy sensational. "Marty" Schwartz, formerly a Warner man in Salem, Ore., is in charge of the Western.

Jake Rosenthal Is Still Batting High Average Out In Iowa



That theatre managers still rate a vacation in some parts of this country is substantiated in a report from Virgil Lewis, advertising and publicity manager of the Capitol Theatre in Waterloo, Iowa. This is the alibi advanced for neglect to send any late information concerning his and Manager Jake Rosenthal's activities and since we are entirely in sympathy with vacations, we'll have to forgive him this time.

But he states that Jake hasn't been vacationing very much, at that; at least, not when it came to a presentation of "Dirigible," for his efforts had two hundred standing in line before opening and the house filled all week. This was accomplished through placarding the title on everything that was circulating about town, from spare tire covers to stickers on checks sent out from theatre and several merchants' stores. Jake sends out checks every now and then to people who imagine he owes them money, so you can see that this is quite a scheme. Tie-ups were also made with department stores, drug stores and novelty shops, augmented with a liberal dose of newspaper advertising. Grant Cooper, the gentleman in charge of the house, had the front decked out like an Irish holiday, as you can see by the accompanying photo.

The returns on the above campaign justified Rosenthal's theory that there's still loose money even in these times, if one will make a worthwhile attempt to divert some of it to the theatre box-office; and so we're passing along his scheme of campaign to other Club members. Glad to hear that both you and Jake are wearing the Club emblem, Virgil, and here's hoping to hear more about what's going on out your way.

NEW YEAR'S EVE SHOW!

NOW is the time to get started on that special midnight show. Most of the live-wire managers have already made their plans and are probably advertising the big night.

Most of the home-town folk in your community are going to spend New Year's Eve locally; they won't be spending a lot of money for a vacation in the nearby big city. So see that they all know about the Gala Party to be held at your theatre to welcome in the New Year.

Try to dig up some stage talent, professional or local, but if local, be darned sure that they're good or the spirit (?) of the occasion may move some slightly comical patron to start the razzberries. Don't let a good show become spoiled through any oversight on your part. Lay your plans carefully and well in advance, figure out each and every detail of the performance, see that everything is prepared and nothing left to the last minute.

If any sort of novelties or noise-makers are to be distributed, get them ordered long before Christmas and you won't be disappointed. Ditto for the clown outfits for your ushers, etc.

Here's a glorious chance to stage a grand party that will give them plenty to talk about for weeks after. Tie the newspaper into it if you can and get the benefit of their cooperation and publicity.

Don't permit past records to bother you one bit. Make up your mind that there are several hundred dollars to be made on one of these shows and your house can use that dough very nicely.

S. Solomon Put Over Strong Campaign On "American Tragedy"

Title of picture, cast and strong mention of Paramount's 20th Birthday, formed the backbone of the campaign made on "American Tragedy" by S. S. Solomon, manager of the Paramount Theatre, Youngstown, Ohio. In addition, this picture was chosen for the reopening of the State Theatre, another local Publix house.

Two weeks in advance the Paramount's screen was used to plug the picture's arrival at the State with an especially arranged trailer and a combination of regular trailer and catchlines went into action one week in advance.

The entire preview of the State was revamped for the premiere and the box office was opened one day in advance to answer all 'phone inquiries and for the selling of unreserved seats for the preview arranged for critics and prominent citizens. This performance netted the picture editorial mention and a feature write-up by one staff reporter. As the preview guests entered the lobby an important personage secured the signatures of the better known people and these were written on a large piece of parchment for lobby display.

In addition to his newspaper campaign, radio broadcast and liberal billing, many circulars were mailed to a selected list and a personal appeal was made by Solomon himself in a letter on the back of a roto herald. Special letters were also mailed to all members of the legal profession.

In spite of inclement weather, Solomon's campaign on this picture netted fine returns to the State and got this house off to an excellent start. We'll be telling you more about this Club member's activities in future issues. The accompanying photo shows members of the service staff exploiting "Monkey Business."

THE REAL CLUB SPIRIT:
"ALL FOR ONE AND ONE FOR ALL"

HOLIDAY TRAILERS AND SHORTS!

To live up to the spirit of the Yuletide you will want some appropriate short subject for the holiday week and, of course, proper trailers with which to greet your patrons.

Due to the limited number of prints placed in each exchange, holiday subjects, or any shorts that tie in with Christmas and New Years must be dated in far in advance. If your booking is handled through another source, get busy and see that they get you set with what you want.

Trailers are necessary and should be secured from whatever company making the type best suited to your type of house and patronage. Most of the trailer companies will be sending out announcements regarding this and will describe in detail the various trailers they are offering. See that you pick the best and have it on hand well in advance of the holidays.

Orlove To Stay At Milwaukee Uptown; He's Some Showman

Only a short time ago we were confronted with the melancholy duty of setting up in type the story of Louis Orlove's transfer from the management of the Uptown Theatre, Milwaukee, to another managerial post in Detroit. The reason advanced for this move was the lure of advancement in his profession. Having in mind all those poor little kiddies out in Orlove's neighborhood, we felt mighty bad about his departure. We knew that there was a possibility of his Mickey Mouse Club going on the rocks; knew that all his merchant friends on the North Side would sorely miss him, and were also aware of the fact that his candidacy for Alderman of the Nineteenth Ward had been announced.

Well, he had us all crying back here in Club headquarters. According to some newspaper clippings, etc., the North Avenue Advancement Association, of which he was vice-president, was wearing a deep shade of mourning, and practically everyone in his neighborhood was in a dejected state of mind. A pathetic three-column picture in the local newspaper, depicted Louis with some of his Mickey Mouse friends sobbingly draped over his shoulders on eve of departure. It was a sad state of affairs, indeed.

Dry all your tears for Mr. Orlove. He doesn't need them. In the first place he did not go to Detroit; he's going to stay right at the old stand. Secondly, take a look at the ad he promoted on the strength of his departure. It's a cuckoo, isn't it? Even though he felt so very badly about leaving, there was still strength enough left to go out and promote an 8 x 10 inch ad from the boys who keep stores along North Avenue. And that's not all, by any means. Listen to this one, and continue to keep your handkerchief nearby. While his transfer was still pending, he promoted a contest on "WHY PATRONS WERE SORRY OR GLAD THAT HE WAS LEAVING!" Beat that one if you can! Why, you can't even tie it. Concerning the latter, eighteen theatre ticket prizes were awarded for the best fifty-word answers.

Playing the part of a Pagliachhi was a heart-rending role, wasn't it, Louis? Just think it over for a moment, boys; the Show Must Go On . . . and Orlove, his heart near breaking point, must engage in the mercenary duty of keeping the name of the Uptown before the public eye. . . . Shake, Louis! We always knew that you were SOME showman; now we're more convinced of this than ever before. Stay out with your merchants and kiddies of the Northside. They need you. And let the Club know what kind of a stunt you staged when you announced your decision to remain; and how you came out in the Aldermanic race.

Swigger Cashed In By Making Tie-Up With Local Bakery

When ushering in the premiere of "Palmy Days," Holmes Swigger, manager of the Denver Theatre, Denver, Colo., took advantage of the popular baking company and other tieups which are in extensive use throughout the country at this time and as a result secured generous window space and wide distribution of literature in all parts of the city.

His tieup with a local baker secured the privilege of draping Cantor banners on both sides of the 60-odd delivery trucks which paraded the streets one week in advance and three days during run of picture. Another deal made with a butter company resulted in the distribution of 50,000 heralds, and a grocery concern made mention of the picture in a three-column ad that tied up with a giveaway of guest tickets to persons whose names were mentioned in the next ad. Reproductions of the ads were pasted on the windows of 180 stores. An arrangement was also made with a coffee distributor for the serving of free coffee and cake in the theatre lobby. The lobby was decorated with special cut-outs of Cantor, with gilt-tinsel letters on velvet background.

According to a number of campaigns on this picture, there appears to be vast possibilities of securing aid from bakers, cake dealers and other food-stuff concerns, and Swigger's efforts are right on par with all that have come to our attention. We will hope to hear more about his show-selling stunts out in Denver.

Hamilton Made Use Of His Name When Exploiting Arliss

If any of you Club members happen to have the same name as B. B. Hamilton, manager of the Palace Theatre, Norwich, Conn., or can fit your name to any other picture title, you might try an amusing little gag that this Round Tabler recently pulled over in his town. It certainly is a new one, as far as we're concerned at this end of the Table.

On the occasion of "Alexander Hamilton," he got out a four-page tabloid entitled "The Norwich Tattler," headed "Scandalous Love Affairs of Hamilton." A cut of Arliss adorned the front page, along with scenes from other pictures and the balance of the paper contained scenes and notes on coming attractions.

Waiting for the gag? Here it is: He had 15 boys take out 4,000 of these papers and got them to yell all about the great scandal that Hamilton had gotten into at the Palace Theatre. It being a popular notion that scandal, motion pictures and even theatre managers are sometimes intimately associated, the public fell for the hoax in a big way. And it helped put the feature over.

Of course, Clubmen, a fellow has to stay in one place long enough to have a public know his name when it is hooked up with scandalous goings-on, if one is to be in a position to pull a Hamilton; and in these days of firing, hiring and transferring it may not be too practical on a wide scale. But if the shoe fits, try to wear it and give a hand to B. B. for some fast thinking.

Variety Of Stunts Pulled By MacLevy For B'klyn Circuit

While the name of Monty MacLevy, supervisor of a number of theatres for Randforce Amusement Corp., Brooklyn, N. Y., has been missing from these pages for some little time, this does not mean that he has not been busily engaged with showbusiness; on the contrary, he and Jack Cohen, assistant manager of the Lefferts Theatre, have been putting over a variety of worthwhile stunts the last few months.

To decide the "scale championship" and stimulate interest among the younger generation in Kings and Queens counties, a circular was issued requesting that the kiddies submit models of 'planes. Boys and girls from 10 to 18 years were eligible and the net result was an effective lobby display of some 150 models. A small box in the lower portion of the circular, advertising three dealers in 'plane model supplies, took care of cost of printing. Gifts were made to those who fashioned the best models.

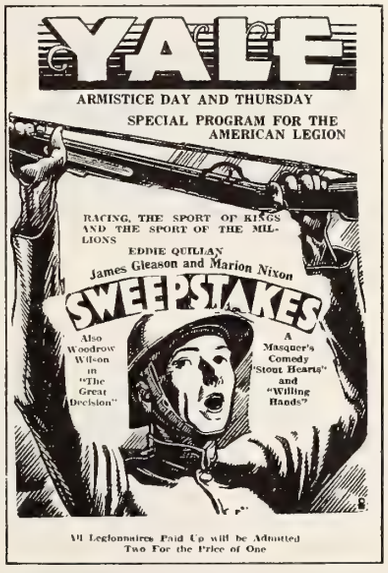
In the small photo, note one of 30 large birthday cakes that these two showmen promoted to help sell "Fall Opening of Greater Show Season." Back of this huge piece of pastry, which measured 3½ feet in diameter, you can see the attractive cut-out figure holding aloft the announcement. Among the other photos at the bottom of the page the big collection of various articles of interest to school children shows a phase of an essay drive conducted in various schools and entered into by 27 of the Randforce theatres. The subject was, "Why I Am Glad to Return to School." Fifteen fine pen and pencil sets were promoted for each theatre, the one pictured here being that of the Lefferts.

Among the good-will stunts recently promoted by the Lefferts was the offer of its auditorium for Sunday services of an M. E. congregation, following a fire that practically destroyed the church. Numerous letters were received reflecting appreciation from members of the congregation.

Plans are also being made for a Chamber of Commerce in the Richmond Hill section to further community events. While manager of the Fox-Cross Bay and Lynbrook theatres, MacLevy was very successful in the matter of organizing merchants' associations, etc., and his experience will again stand him in good need.

He is also effecting wide distribution of house programs through the placing of special boxes on store counters in the immediate theatre neighborhood. Through this medium alone 2,000 of these are circulated for the Lefferts and it has proven a most economical means of advertising. On the outside of the box is printed, "Lefferts Theatre—Weekly Program—Take One—Thank You." Also, through a tie-up with a Brooklyn newspaper, 1,000 programs are delivered from house to house each week.

In line with the general relief movement throughout the country, plans are already being carried out at the Lefferts and a large number of organizations have responded. Turkeys have been promoted for Thanksgiving Eve and other means of rendering aid to the poor will be employed from time to time.

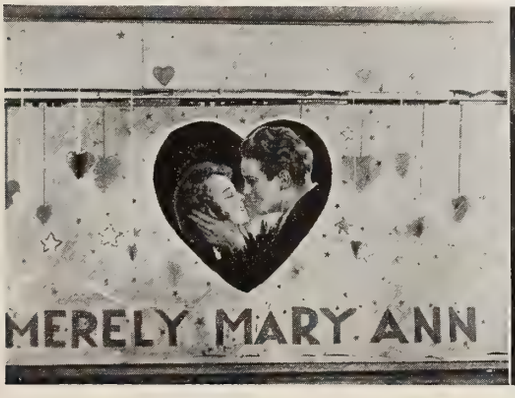


The other photos in lay-out show displays made for "Transatlantic" and "Merely Mary Ann." The Lefferts management is extremely fortunate in having the services of an usher who is artistically inclined and these are examples of his handiwork.

Now that Monty is again an active contributor to these pages, we hope he will continue to keep his fellow Club members informed on what's going on among the several houses he has under supervision. We realize that his job keeps him on his toes.

Taylor and Seymour Putting Over Shows In Okmulgee, Okla.

Out in Okmulgee, Okla., where Robt. I. Taylor manages the Yale Theatre, assisted by his advertising man, G. D. Seymour, value of plugging the football season is not lost sight of, nor is the framing of a special ad neglected for an occasion such as Armistice Day. Note the accompanying ad on "Sweepstakes" he ran as a direct appeal to all Legionaires in and around Okmulgee. In case you cannot decipher the message in small print at bottom of the ad, it reads: "All Legionaires Paid Up Will Be Admitted Two for the Price of One."



During the football season Seymour gets out a folder made of substantial stock carrying names of all players of opposing teams on the inside spread. In addition to names, number and weight of players is indicated. Substitutes are also listed. The front cover plugs the week's attractions and space on the back cover is devoted to scoring table by quarters and further theatre advertising.

Regarding the mat in the Armistice Day ad, of doughboy holding gun aloft, these can generally be obtained through your newspaper mat services if none be available locally. Many managers use an ad like this occasionally for reason that it breaks up the monotony of regular run of advertising. Seymour's football score card stunt is a seasonable one and about the only suggestion that we could make is that a small local ad might have taken care of the cost of getting it out. But that's a small item, considering its value in the way of publicizing the house. We have yet to record this contributor and Manager Taylor as regular Round Tablers.

A CORRECTION!

A few weeks ago we described a campaign made on "Huckleberry Finn" at the Olympia Theatre, Miami, Fla., and gave credit for same to James H. McCoy, City Manager. As a matter of fact, the entire campaign was planned and executed by his assistant, Francis Falkenberg, when Mack was away on his vacation.

Ed. Hart Emphasized Circus Angle When Selling 'Side-Show'

Not so long ago we had occasion to pass along some information on how E. M. Hart, manager of the Stanley Theatre, Utica, N. Y., sells a show in his newly adopted home. That he's a showman who believes in doing something that hits them right in the eyes there can be no doubt, for all his ballyhoos and displays have a habit of bordering on the sensational. The fact that a picture hasn't pulled so very well in some other spot doesn't make any difference to him; he just goes out and sells it. The following is what he did in connection with "Side Show":

The local Chamber of Commerce chose to stage a "Utica Day" during the showings of this picture and Hart was right on the job. He was appointed chairman of the Parade Committee and arranged to have the parade form in front of the theatre. In it was included the city police, firemen, several units of the American Legion, three bands, Veterans of Foreign Wars, a cavalry troupe, several floats and elephants and patrol wagon entered by the Stanley. Two of the accompanying illustrations show the clown police patrol and the animals performing in front of the theatre.

The circus angle was played up strongly throughout the entire campaign, with street ballyhoo of clown through the shopping district and a float on truck resembling a side-show tent. The clown carried a sign advertising the picture and distributed samples of Lifesavers in a small envelope carrying copy,

"Find a Utica Day Souvenir Inside and Remember That "Side Show" at the Stanley Is a Life Saver and Will Save You from the Blues and Other Gloomy Ailments." The float, as illustrated here, followed the Chamber of Commerce float (which carried bells and sirens) all through the city and neighboring towns and villages, numbering about 60.

In addition to the promotion of 15,000 sample packages of Life-Savers, which were distributed by clown and ballyhoo trucks in advance of attraction, free Coco-Cola was also promoted for patrons during engagement of picture. It made an appropriate circus tie-up.

Other advertising included the placarding of 10 auto delivery trucks and three buses, traveling in and out of town; projection of slides to sheet atop building facing "Busy Corner"; six sheet billing on same corner; 50 advertising cards in local and suburban merchants' windows; a 24-sheet on main road leading into town; distribution of 3,000 heralds in local and New York papers; a 24-sheet cut-out suspended from marquee, and a unique single-column ad in "Utica Day" double trucks, running full length of page and reading in opposite direction.

He also obtained free double column mats with a special story in connection with "Utica Day" and the special show at the Stanley, advising visitors of plenty of parking space near the theatre; the free checking of parcels at the theatre; souvenirs, and a write-up on picture, all covering about 30 inches of free space.

Hart was highly commended by the chairman of the committee representing the Chamber of Commerce for his activities in behalf of the Retail Merchants' Group, which had the support of the Mayor and city officials. It will be recalled that this Round Tabler hasn't been in his town for a very long time and he is to be congratulated for making such fine headway in this direction. He feels that his strong campaign brought up the gross on this picture, particularly in view of the fact that business for the first two days was so much better than that of the third.

We have several other stunts of Hart's on hand and these will follow from week to week until we present them all. As stated, he has been most successful in circussing his picture wares to the Utica public and it is therefore to be assumed that we can all gather a wealth of helpful ideas from this enterprising showman of the Mohawk Valley.

Brown's Co-Op Ad On "Smart Woman" Made Strong Plug

The title of "Smart Women" appealed so strongly to a number of merchants in his town that H. C. Brown, manager of the Rivoli Theatre, Greenville, S. C., won their cooperation in the promotion of a full page of ads that appeared in the Sunday morning and Tuesday afternoon papers prior to the picture's opening. The pages were made especially attractive to women and only one ad was sold to one merchant of each line of merchandise, such as jewelry, shoes, hats, dresses, beauty parlor, florist, millinery, etc.

Cards in the several store windows were arranged to spell out the title of the picture and shoppers were invited to correctly list the letters in the various windows. The theatre donated guest tickets to those who sent in the lists.

Any picture with the word "Smart" as part of the title seems to rate a co-op these days, so apparently it's a popular merchandising word. "Smart Money" came in for a flock of co-op pages and now we'll predict that there will be a lot promoted on this picture, thanks to Brown's contribution to this department.

Waltman Arranged With P-T Group To Plug Arliss Film

Burgess Waltman, manager of the Warners theatre, the Grand, in Fulton, Kentucky, is credited with having originated a stunt that has worked not only for the direct financial advantage of his house, but has done much to build up good will for the theatre in his community.

Having booked George Arliss in "Alexander Hamilton," Waltman looked about for means of interesting the school children and the teachers in Fulton in the picture. The idea that he carried out was to tieup with the Parent Teachers Association and arrange a series of benefits for the organization during the run of "Alexander Hamilton." All these Parent Teachers Associations throughout the country are supported wholly by their members. They have no means of raising money for the carrying out of their work. In Fulton the members of the Association personally sold tickets for "Alexander Hamilton" and the benefits proved successful.

While the schools have turned out to be a natural source of exploitation for the above picture, Waltman appears to have gone a few steps further when he enlisted the whole-hearted support of the Parent-Teachers' Association. This was a most worthy move and he and his theatre will undoubtedly reap a future reward.

MUSIC AND TALENT

STAGE SHOWS

San Francisco Fox

Week ending November 18

Vaudeville holds forth this week in the Fanchon & Marco "Aloha Idea," with the introductory music and the setting alone having anything to do with Hawaii. Walt Roesner and his musical tribe are on the stage for a change and the Sunkist Beauties, which one might have expected to be a feature of a Hawaiian performance, are conspicuous by their absence. The show, however, is pleasing.

The act opens with a tropical setting and a huge liner lying at the dock. A hula dancer goes through her steps as "The Song of the Islands" is played and Gaylene and DuRyane. acrobatic dancers, offer some novelties, getting a good hand for handsprings with odd twists.

Al Gordon's dogs prove a highlight and raise many a laugh with their comic actions. How they can be trained to be so nonchalant is a mystery and they seem to get as much fun out of the performance as the audience, from the tiny member who throws fits to the more sedate fellow who stands on his hind legs on a trapeze.

The Briants, comic pantomimists, demonstrate that a lot of patter is not necessary to put over an act. One takes the role of a dummy and simply oozes over the stage, while the other, dressed as a stevedore, attempts to seat him. The act proves one of the hits of the show.

Ryan and Noblette have a song and dance turn which gets by despite the lack of voice, the personality of the girl putting it over.

The Four Kadex offer an aerial acrobatic turn, making use of some very complicated apparatus. The stage offering comes to an end with Ryan introducing the principals as they go aboard the boat to sail for San Francisco.

Detroit Michigan

Week ending November 19

Louie's Hungry Five, those notable assassins of peace and quiet from WGN, Chicago, headed by Herr Louie and the Weasel, are the high spot, and low spot and all spots between the trey and the ace at the Michigan this week.

The boys get off to a great start. The funny little German band that is tickling the eardrums of radio listeners all over the country has all the show business "it" that is necessary. They clown and gag their way through quite a few minutes of nonsense and whatnot, and finish up with a blackout gag that—while it is almost as old as the prop is supposed to be—gets the laughs.

Bob Nolan, he who wears his clothes well and has been mastering the ceremonies hereabouts for many, many weeks, is right back at 'em again in this show. The stage settings—six of them—are a credit to Ed J. Wiesfeldt, and the dancing ensemble keeps time and shows the results of hard practice.

Vaudeville Takes Upturn In Philadelphia Theatres

Vaudeville appears to be taking an upturn in Philadelphia theatres, led by Nixon's Grand, which has been scoring with "name" stars on the stage, plus first neighborhood run films.

It is rumored that the Shuberts will abandon the Shubert, 2,000-seater, and that it will be taken by the Sablocky interests, to be opened as a first-run vaudeville house.

JOHN GART

This chap is just about the youngest organist-musical conductor in the business. He is 23 years old, born in Moscow in 1908. He received his education at the Conservatory of Music, Moscow. His stage experience started when he was 10, piano accompanist to his father, who was an opera singer in Europe. His career as theatre organist started when he was assigned to Loew's 83rd Street theatre, New York City. Since that time he has been featured organist in a number of Loew theatres in the metropolitan district. A few months ago he was assigned as both organist and musical conductor at Loew's 46th Street theatre, Brooklyn. He is not only an accomplished musician but a very good arranger as well.

Fanchon To Europe Seeking Novelties for Stage Show

Fanchon Simon, of Fanchon & Marco, stage show producers, arrived in New York from the coast on Sunday, en route to Europe in search of foreign novelties. She will direct the Roxy midnight benefit performance on Wednesday.

Fanchon today produces stage shows for 45 cities in the country and employs some 2,000 stage artists, with a weekly payroll of $150,000.

Tucker at Skouras House

Sophie Tucker is playing the Audubon Theatre in New York this week under the new policy of the Skouras Brothers. She is introducing three new songs written by Jack Yellen. She followed her record engagement at the Oriental in Chicago with similar new marks for the Fisher at Detroit. It is reported that while in Detroit she was offered the lead in two musical productions and may accept one of them.

STAGE SHOWS

Detroit Fisher

Week ending November 19

The ghost of vaudeville of the days when vaudeville was vaudeville stalked the stage of the Fisher in great style, and won capacity crowds. Topping the show was none other than Johnny Burke, Mack Sennett's famous comedian, who gagged his way through eight or ten minutes of hearty laughs. Johnny is no stranger in these parts, and yet he can tell the same stories in the same way and always drag 'em to the theatre.

Al Stone and Miss Lee provide the comedy chatter. Stone plays a trombone, while his attractive partner teases melodies out of the piano. The chatter is fast and clean, and Miss Lee might well be the reason why men leave home.

The opening number, in full stage, features the Wan Wan San troupe of eight Chinese tumblers. This act seems to come from the limbo of things-almost-forgotten, yet it moves along, presents some clever tumbling and acrobatics, and starts the show the way a show should be started.

As a closer, Chaney and Fox are offered in a dance skit. The first number is an alleged Spanish affair. Then Earl Paul, piano accompanist, renders a solo banjo number, allowing time for costume changes. A "ballroom" waltz number finishes the proceedings in a medley of favorite airs.

The show is well balanced, and as a change from the usual fare at the Fisher is most welcome. If audience reaction means anything, local Publix officials might find a diet of real vaudeville of benefit.

London Theatres Use Bands; Gaumont May Continue Policy

Jack Hylton has been booked with an orchestra of 60 at the Gaumont Victoria theatre, London, in connection with the film, "Splinters in the Navy."

Another band is playing in conjunction with the film "Carnival" at the Tivoli and if the idea appears successful, will be continued throughout the Gaumont circuit. It is seen as an indication that the desire for music did not go when the talking film arrived in England.

Three Reopen in Philadelphia

Recent Philadelphia openings included Fay's in West Philadelphia on a straight vaudeville policy; the Liberty, by United Chains, Inc., with a series of negro revues and the Casino, under independent management, with burlesque.

NBC Signs Columbo

Russ Columbo, noted radio singer, has signed an exclusive long-term contract with the National Broadcasting Company and will be heard nightly over coast-to-coast networks.

Albertina Rasch Doing Short

Albertina Rasch is working on her third short for Vitaphone, with eight Rasch dancers in the number, entitled "Cheer Up." Roy Mack of the Vitaphone staff is directing.

ED DAWSON

Named Rochester M. C.

Ken Whitmer has been named master of ceremonies at Loew's Rochester, being billed as combined actor, musician and stunt man. He is noted as a player of any instrument in the band.

$10,000 Spotlight

When Don Galvin, performing at the Rialto, Louisville, Ky., took his guitar and crooned beside Mrs. Susan B. Hall, in the audience, she was "insulted, embarrassed, tantalized and harassed," and being in the spotlight injured her good name, and her "fame and credit were brought to public ridicule, scandal, infamy and disgrace." And for that Mrs. Hall wants $10,000 damages from the Fourth Avenue Amusement Company. She claims she became nervous and hysterical through the ordeal of being crooned to, finally fainted, was carried from the theatre, treated by a physician and was ill for six weeks. Her attorney, Joseph W. Cambron filed the suit.

STAGE SHOWS

Milwaukee Wisconsin

Week ending November 19

Margie and Teeps Lucille open Fanchon & Marco's "Nursery Rhymes" Idea singing a ditty about the old woman in the shoe. The curtains then part and with a large shoe as a background the chorus caper about in girly costumes with ribbons in their hair. The first episode is augmented by Clinton, a novelty acrobat who takes the part of "Jack Be Nimble." He flips and flops about the stage in great style.

The second episode also is introduced by the two Lucilles who sing a song about Miss Moffet, this part is played by Bararina, who dances in an engaging style and has as her help mate a clever little poodle.

Tom Patricola, the featured player of the Idea, stamps and clowns about in an able fashion. His bits are augmented in several instances by the Sisters Lucille, who offer an imitation of the Duncan Sisters singing "I Never Had No Mammy."

The chorus, garbed to represent a bouquet of flowers, dance amid a garden setting. They give way to Patricola, who dances and strums the uke to "Some of These Days."

Schichtl's marionettes offer a novel entertainment feature. The puppets are manipulated to produce a smooth performance with a number of surprises incorporated. Some of the puppets enter in one character only to be suddenly changed to one entirely different.

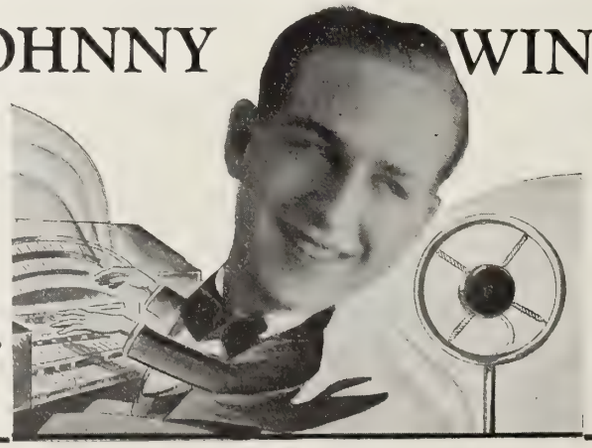
For the finale the chorus are garbed in white feathery costumes representatives of geese.

SLICES OF MELLIN

By BOBBY MELLIN

CHICAGO

Hal Kemp and his orchestra open a two-months engagement at the Adolphus Hotel, Dallas, Texas. . . . Popular concert music of the type associated with the name of Ferde Grofe, and vocal varieties by the beautiful Jane Froman, Jack Fulton and the King's Jesters, will combine to make a brilliant spot in Sunday afternoon radio entertainment when the Florsheim Frolic presents it coast-to-coast series at a new time. Fifty-four stations associated with the NBC will broadcast the show each Sunday from 3 to 3:30 P. M. Symphonic in tone, the orchestra under the leadership of Grofe will "dress up" currently favorite melodies and present wellknown compositions of its conductor. Harmonies arranged to suit the taste of the King's Jesters will be sprinkled liberally throughout the programs. The distinctive contralto blues of Miss Froman and the beautiful tenor voice of Jack Fulton will lend additional vocal color in their solo interpretations of songs in popular demand. As a composer Grofe is, perhaps, best known for his "Mississippi Suite" and just recently his "Knute Rockne Tone Theme" was given its debut on the air by Paul Whiteman, receiving a nation-wide ovation. Miss Froman's rich contralto voice is a comparatively recent discovery. It narrowly escaped oblivion in a journalistic career. Fulton has risen to fame with the King's Jesters in the Whiteman organization. . . . You've no doubt heard from Harry Bush that he's back in town working for Sherman Clay & Co. Well, Harry's back and he is just a little "louder" than Harry Lauder, and even just a little bit more Scotchy.



Joe Sanders, associate of Carleton Coon with the Coon-Sanders orchestra which is playing a long engagement at the Hotel New Yorker, was born in Thayer, Kansas. Coon-Sanders led the first orchestra to broadcast in this country. Al & Pete will soon leave the NBC, as will Jules Herbeveaux. Bernie Cummins closed at the Congress hotel and opens at the Netherland Plaza.

The three orchestras which replace Rolph on the Lucky Strike programs are those of Wayne King, Andy Sannella and Gus Arnheim.

Sannella is a noted director of radio and recording orchestras, is an accomplished musician, playing the saxophone, the steel guitar, the clarinet and the violin, with ease and artistry, as well as being a composer. Arnheim is the lion of the sophisticated group who attend the fashionable Cocoanut Grove in the Ambassador Hotel in Los Angeles. He is a wellknown composer and has also appeared in many screen productions.

ORGAN SOLOS

DICK HARTIGAN (Schenectady RKO Plaza) entertained his audience, the first half of the week, with an interesting community sing entitled "Sweetheart Novelty." All "Sweetheart" songs were used, including "Let Me Call You Sweetheart," "Sweethearts on Parade," "Can't Stop Me from Loving You," "You're My Only Sweetheart," and "Good-Night, Sweetheart." The novelty went over so well that Dick had the audience pick the song they liked best and he repeated it for an encore. For the second half of the week he put on a piano act on the stage. Opening with "Dizzy Fingers," then his own arrangement of "Indian Love Call," he then sang a few popular songs. Having recently sung over the radio in Albany, Dick's fine voice is even better known than he is in these parts and his radio popularity has made him a big draw in this house. He closed the act with a "hot" arrangement of "Kitten On the Keys." He has made many friends during his "guest organist" engagement here.

BOB WEST (Philadelphia Fox) conducted a "Married versus Single" contest that aroused great competition. The contesting parties appeared to derive a great deal of enjoyment out of the songs, which included "Maybe I'm Right," "Nevertheless," "You Didn't Have to Tell Me," "I Wanna Sing About You," and "Please Don't Talk About Me When I'm Gone." There is no question that West has succeeded in getting an enthusiastic response from the audiences at this theatre.

RON & DON (Brooklyn Fox) present another of their popular "Sing-Song-Fests." This one is composed of six numbers, the audience singing and enjoying all of them. The songs were "Pardon Me, Pretty Baby," "Without that Gal," a special to "Through with Love," "Sweet and Lovely," special lyrics on "Roll On, Mississippi," and "Good-Night Sweetheart." Don is seated at the big pit console, Ron at the baby console on the stage, both of them leading and talking and beaming upon the audience to the patrons' huge enjoyment.

ART BROWN
SAYING:
"HOW'RE YOU ALL?"

SELECTED TO OPEN THE NEW Paramount Theatre
Charlottesville, Va.

ART BROWN WILL HENCEFORTH BE KNOWN AS "BROWNIE"

WALTER SEIFERT (Hartford Strand) presented an entertaining community songfest which incorporated a number of popular tunes. Seifert built up a continuity with "dreams" as the subject and carried the theme throughout the solo. This, of course, was minor, the singing being the main thing, and how this audience did sing. Numbers were: "I Apologize," "Little Old Church in the Valley," "To Be Worthy of You," "Pagan Moon," and "Good Night Sweetheart."

Seifert is a good organist, a pleasant talker, makes all announcements through the "mike" and enhances the program with a singing usher, who with a little more training would be a good singer. Seifert has been in Hartford for the last six years and is very popular.

ROBERT G. CLARKE (Detroit Tollywood), just to prove to the home town folk that this city is famous for something more than cars, puts over an organ specialty called "Detroit's Tin Pan Alley." Using a scrim drop in front of the horns, and a hidden announcer, the piece opens with a few words about Seymour Simons, who turned out "Honey" and "Waiting for a Call from You." Words for both songs are thrown on the screen and the audience tests its lung power. Then follow "Nothing' to Do But Love," by Gerald Marks; "With You on My Mind," by Buddy Fields; "99 Out of 100," by Al Lewis, and for a wind-up, Dick Whiting's "Till We Meet Again." The "local" angle seems to get 'em.

OVERTURES

CHARLES B. STEIN (Brooklyn Ridgewood) entered the pit from the stage wings as his orchestra played Dvorak's "New World Symphony." Stein then orally introduced the overture as a compilation of Negro spirituals, leading his boys in a showmanly style as they play and sing the numbers. "River Stay Away from My Door" was the number featured, the boys playing it in a hot and rhythmic style, cornetist and clarinetist featuring a hot chorus and three of the boys singing it and then the entire orchestra bringing it to a big climax with a symphonic arrangement. Stein and his boys are one of the main attractions at the Ridgewood.

DAVE SMASON (San Antonio Majestic), one of the best-liked musical conductors the Majestic ever has had, offered as an overture "The Voice of the RKO," the march hit of the Radio-Keith-Orpheum Circuit. Smason injected his magic rhythm into it and even did a violin turn accompanied by the members of the RKO-lians Orchestra. He has augmented the orchestra to 14 pieces.

MAX BRADFIELD (Philadelphia Fox) and his musicians offered selections from Victor Herbert's "Fortune Teller," including the wellknown "Gypsy Love Song." There was nothing outstanding about the orchestration, the most interesting feature being the trick drumming and xylophone playing of Gus Altmiller, which were thoroughly enjoyed by the audience. Willard Singley, baritone, sang "Gypsy Love Song" very creditably.

NICK MARINARO (Astoria Triboro) and His Orchestra offered a short and snappily-played overture of "Popular Melodies," that the audience thoroughly enjoyed. Opening with the "Merry Widow Waltz," as an introduction, the brass section then were featured when they played "Song of Songs." A hot rendition of "Mama Inez," with castinets beating out a rhumba tempo, and a snappy arrangement of "Charlie Cadet" closed this entertaining overture.

EDWARD J. KAY (New York Broadway) and His Varieties Orchestra presented, as their overture this week, a pleasing compilation of popular numbers. The title is "Dancemania," and each of the numbers has the word "Dance" incorporated in it. Numbers are: "Dancing Tambourine," "Dancing in the Dark," "Why Dance" and "Dance Little Lady." Solos by Sam Meisner, violin, James Coughlin, trumpet, and Abe Feinbloom, trombone, enhance the program. Kay also conducts throughout the stage show as well and makes a good job of both.

GLENN WELTY (Milwaukee Wisconsin) and his Wisconsin theatre orchestra offer "Sharps and Flats" for their overture. Selections include "Humoresque," "Prelude in C Sharp Minor" and "To a Wild Rose," featuring a violin quartet and cellist from the orchestra. The feature of the overture is a piano quintet which includes Glenn Welty and Jack Martin, organist at the theatre. Numbers played by the quintet, which performs in an artistic fashion, include "Nola" and "Kitten on the Keys."

JUNIOR MEYERS (Bridgeport Fox-Poli) and His Melody Boys present another of their peppy and entertaining overtures this week, which Meyers introduces as "a medley of popular request numbers." Opening with a snappy arrangement of "Charlie Cadet," violinist being featured for one chorus, Meyers then led them in a beautiful rendition of "Sweet and Lovely," followed by a violin and guitar duet (Meyers playing the violin) of "You Didn't Know the Words." This received a good hand. The entire orchestra followed with a special arrangement of "Stardust," arranged so that a number of the pieces soloed on bits, both on playing and singing. A hot rendition of "Milanburg Joys," working up to a wild frenzy at finish, closed this pleasing overture. This is a first class aggregation and very popular here.

AL RICCI (New York 86th) and His RKOlians offered a high-class overture entitled "Gypsiana," which was outstanding, not only from a musical standpoint but from the audience standpoint as well. This is without doubt the most ambitious overture this new orchestra has put on and the audience showed their appreciation of real and well-played music. Opening with the introduction of Liszt's Hungarian Rhapsody No. 2, and modulating neatly into "Gypsy Dream Rose" and "Black Eyes," Ricci then offered a well-played violin solo of "Play Gypsy-Dance Gypsy." The orchestra closed with the stirring strains of Sarasata's "Czardas" movement of the same operetta. All arrangements of this overture are specially written by Ricci, and his ability and fine leadership are fast making him popular.

Strife Eternal

THE Tri-Ergon vs. All-the-Rest-of-the-Industry patent suits just tossed into the courts by Mr. William Fox, with allegations of infringement of basic sound recording patents, must in the minds of many of the older leaders of the industry seem like a return to the normalcy of the good old days. The motion picture industry was born in patent conflict, grew up under it and thrived through it.

It has for some four years been apparent that the time must come when some litigation or series of litigations must come to shake down the claims and clarify the legal-technological aspects of the sound picture industry. More likely than not, history will repeat itself again in this instance, tracing in the new pattern many of the old steps that led up to and found their culmination in the celebrated case of the United States vs. The Motion Picture Patents Company. It is of dramatic interest, too, in this passage of recollection, to recall that the same Mr. William Fox was a conspicuous figure in urging, developing and supporting the government's case against the Patents Company. In his new role Mr. Fox is his own Patents company.

For some years now both the Radio Corporation of America and the Telephone group have been fortifying themselves with complex compilations of data and evidence against the day of the big war to come. Without any fanfare of publicity considerable staffs of experts have been employed and vast research conducted for the assembling of material that could have a value only in the courts in such a war as is presently to be had.

It is likely that years will pass before the impending controversy and others related to it can be brought to their ultimate legal conclusions, and it is not unlikely that before that time comes the situation will be further tangled by controversies over television which will assuredly prove a fecund source of conflicts.

War in young industries is a normal natural state. And the inventors are continuously conspiring to keep the screen young, very young.

The World Goes On

SOME months ago we were hearing that the country was "fundamentally" sound and such glittering generalities, and a number of gentlemen in high places were saying what gentlemen in high places have always found it necessary to say in days of depression. But these days, with the generalities all said, and mostly petered out, we are hearing some wee small voices that seem to mean a deal more. From here and there, board meetings, conversations on the club car of "The Century," and such places, come casual, but more significant remarks about an upturn, here and there and in various businesses.

Broadcasting over NBC the other night, Mr. William F. Gephart, vice president of the First National Bank of St. Louis and long an authoritative observer of the economic picture remarked:

"No major depression of the past century has resulted in reversing, for more than a very short period, the general upward trend of industrial earnings. The same holds true with respect to wages. While the decline in profits may be sharper than the succeeding rise, they have invariably gone into higher ground within a few years."

The Wet Peaks of '29

If Mr. Will Hays were not so careful and conservative in his platform utterances, it would not be half so much fun as it is just now to toy with two samples:

At French Lick in June, he said:

". . . the patterns for the recovery of business and the resumption of employment are on file in the history of the United States and in the biographies of the bold, shrewd enthusiasts who brought us to the peaks of '29. . . ."

In Los Angeles in November, he broadcast:

". . . I was born near enough to the living shadow of Abraham Lincoln to know that the land which inherited his tradition will never surrender determination to an economic setback. . . . The torch lighted at Lexington was not doused in the watered stocks of '29. . . ."

Maybe it isn't fair to write off the air.

Emotion vs. Intellect

IN the course of a decidedly able discourse on the potential part that the motion picture may play in education, Mr. H. E. Jameson of the Kansas City office of the Fox West Coast Service Corporation told a gathering at the Teachers' College in Kirksville, Missouri:

"This generation has been conditioned to the movie as an entertainment. People seek the screen as a means of exercising their emotions and not their intellects. There is no royal road to learning, and neither can education be acquired by the simple and pleasant process of absorption. The movies are coming to the classroom. They are going to be a handy tool in the hands of educators, but they bring with them a challenge. It's going to be your task to make the movies an adjunct to education and not a substitute for thinking."

Mr. Jameson has done some clear thinking about his subject. Educational pictures will have to be made for educational purposes by educators.

What makes the discussion important here is to point again to the fact that the motion picture exhibitor has no occasion to view with alarm, or anything more than academic interest, the going of the film into the classroom. That's another business, not a competition with amusement.

LESS HEAT AND MORE LIGHT —FOR HOLLYWOOD

An examination into current issues and problems in the picture producing community

by MARTIN QUIGLEY

Hollywood—the world capital of motion picture production—is today an amazing spectacle of excitement, alarm and misgivings.

The tide of events, from within and without the industry, has shocked this vast and intricate mechanism of production.

The men and the machinery are all there, but considerably be-snarled in a self-conscious process of gear shifting on a steep hill, in the rain.

This institution of Hollywood must have a fair degree of success in the discharge of its functions if this industry is not to disintegrate and be blown off in spray, dust or ashes, in one of the several adverse winds now howling across the Sierras.

Meanwhile Hollywood considers itself most seriously misunderstood. And Hollywood is more than half right in this opinion.

But this misunderstanding is only partially a handicap to Hollywood—it will also be Hollywood's salvation.

Comes the Dawn with Dialogue

Looking at the affairs of Hollywood in sharp focus today there is unmistakable evidence that the relative joy-ride of the earlier days of production has passed definitely and completely. The business of Hollywood has taken on a solemn earnestness—in fact, there is more solemnity than the business of entertainment would appear to call for. But with the earnestness there need be no quarrel, and it is there.

Those halcyon days prior to the last three years of silent production, when a decidedly easier method of expression and a much more tolerant and impressionable public made production a far less arduous endeavor, have become neatly stowed away in the vaults of memory, along with the conquistadors of early California. The dawning uncertainty of the last two or three years of silent production, when the guns kept cracking but only occasionally did the quarry come to earth, have become completely blotted out in the deluge of difficulties and perplexities which burst about the studios as the result of the persistency of the Brothers Warner.

Hollywood might have cracked up completely and curled away into the sky like a wisp of smoke in the early months of sound production had not the kindly public been content with virtually nothing more than hearing them talk. But the novelty of talk was of short duration; a cold, cruel dawn came, awaking producers to a realization that dialogue with all of the immemorial difficulties of the spoken word was upon them.

And with this dawn came other sharp and savage realizations. Among these the violent economic upheaval, shaking this and every other industry to its foundations.

With this flash-back we approach the production situation of today.

"Rushes" That Moses Never Saw

One explanation which Hollwood seemingly has not hit upon to account for its being so largely misunderstood is because there has been and there continues in the Hollywood scene a great deal which readily lends itself to misunderstanding. This is partly characteristic of the business and partly characteristic of men and methods carrying on the business.

LOSING EXHIBITOR CONTACT

"Hollywood has drifted far away from that type of contact with the exhibition branch of the industry which in times past contributed to the progress of popular entertainment. This is another evil which may be laid at the door of large theatre circuit operation.

"Previously every theatre owner, being in daily contact with the trend of popular tastes, ranked importantly in Hollywood. His opinion was solicited and respected.

"With the development of the theatre departments of the principal film companies, the producing branch permitted itself to be divorced from its former contact with individual exhibition interests and came to rely upon its own theatre departments for contact. But this contact never materialized in any helpful form...."

The whole world knows that last year's product of the studios was disappointing—to the public and consequently to the theatre box office. There is no proof now—and there never will be any—that this outcome was anything more than an accident of production, a natural and inevitable incident of the amazingly difficult business of making entertainment for the millions. We say there is no proof to the contrary, and that is the truth. But when an occurrence of this kind comes about, natural and inevitable as it may indeed be, it is only reasonable that all concerned should wish to delve deeply and widely into the situation with a hope of determining first-handedly whether both men and methods are all that they should be.

And just this has been done and is being done. Hollywood has been subjected to such inquiry, such survey and such investigation as to leave, by comparison, any prominent member of Tammany Hall, New York, feeling that really he has quite escaped official scrutiny.

Recognizing the propriety of these inquiries, surveys and investigations, we are still compelled to regard them largely as a waste of time, effort and money. The reason is simple and—we believe—sound: The examinations have been made mostly by persons who do not know Hollywood. It may be argued that a good reason for selecting an examiner is because he does not know Hollywood. In a great variety of examinations this would indeed be a good reason. In this case, however, it is no reason at all because not to know Hollywood is either to be full of preconceived notions, vague and inaccurate, or to be destitute of essential facts, or both.

Hollywood needs help—and a lot of it—but not that kind of alleged help which is offered by persons to whom experienced producers must first explain that the "rushes" referred to are not exactly the same as those described in the biblical foundling-place of Moses. The help that Hollywood needs can be and should be supplied out of the vast fund of knowledge and experience which has been accumulated within the industry during the past twenty years.

Isolated While the World Moves On

Unfortunately, Hollywood, for some reason not easily explainable, has become alarmingly isolated from the rest of the fault because the production colony has resorted to means of insulating itself from many of the quickening and informing reactions that previously came to it from other sections of the industry. This has resulted, repeatedly, in Hollywood going contentedly in the wrong direction, oblivious of the fact that in the world-wide march of entertainment it was decidedly out of step. A pointed evidence of this is to be found in the persistent adhesion to the sophisticated, English drawing-room type of plays long after they had driven ninety percent of the theatre owners, who were compelled to play them to diminishing audiences, almost to the point of frenzy.

Hollywood has pretty completely resolved itself into a world of its own. This would be a proper state of affairs if Hollywood were making pictures for its own entertainment; but being charged with the responsibility of making entertainment for vast millions of the world outside, the condition is altogether wrong.

Hollywood has drifted far away from that type of contact with the exhibition branch of the industry which in times past contributed to the progress of popular entertainment. This is another evil which may be laid at the door of large theatre circuit operation. Previously every theatre owner, being in daily contact with the trend of popular tastes, ranked importantly in Hollywood. His opinion was solicited and respected. With the development of the theatre departments of the principal film companies, the producing branch permitted itself to be divorced from its former contact with individual exhibition interests and came to rely upon its own theatre departments for contact. But this contact never materialized in any helpful form. Instead of being a friendly and cooperative contact it degenerated largely into a condition of jealously and strife. Theatre departments took credit for successful operation of the theatre when business was good. When business was not good the theatre departments blamed the product. Naturally Hollywood ceased to look to the theatre departments for advice and information. The production colony eventually came to produce what it liked—and let it go at that.

A vast economic loss now being suffered by the industry is due to the non-use by Hollywood of the great store of showmanship knowledge and experience which exists elsewhere in the business.

A great mistake being made in Hollywood is the assumption that because it knows how to produce it necessarily follows that at all times and under all circumstances it likewise knows what to produce.

All Drowning in Details of Production

"There are practically no executives in Hollywood! Almost without exception the men who enjoy the highest executive titles are just as busy with all of the practical details of production as any workers in the ranks. Unless motion picture production occupies some wholly unique position in the field of human endeavor it is possible to have assistants who can carry out the plans and policies prescribed by the executive councils. Production has drifted dangerously within the immediate control of a few men because they have permitted it to do so and have done little or nothing to change the trend. . . ."

By "what to produce" we do not mean any particular story. Rather we mean types of stories and the broader and more basic trends of popular entertainment. In many instances, the production colony can better determine what to produce in consultation with any one of ten thousand exhibitors across the country than it can in a conference of an imposing array of production genius.

The axiom that "nothing but product counts" has led to many serious misconceptions. It has been interpreted to mean that "nothing but Hollywood counts" which is precisely a wrong interpretation. It is true that good product is the only secure foundation upon which the industry can rest but for Hollywood to undertake single-handedly to make good product without appropriate information and guidance from the theatres and without the firing-line knowledge gained from day to day by the sales organizations, is to attempt something that in theory is impossible and in actual practice has proved far from a success.

It is quite understandable why Hollywood has come to resent the New York viewpoint and to ignore the exhibitor. This has not come about arbitrarily or by any pre-determination upon the part of the producers. But it has happened and, moreover, it has gone quite far enough.

Over Organization Forgets Showmanship

The motion picture business has become unhealthily over-organized. Committees and conferences have too greatly supplanted individual initiative, judgment and decision. In many fields of industrial activity too much organization may not even be possible. But in the motion picture business it is not only possible but it actually has taken place. The making and marketing of entertainment for the millions is not and can never be a scientific operation. To attempt scientific procedure is to reduce the operations of the industry to a machanical and commonplace plane and when the entertainment business hits this dead-level it becomes only the shadow and image of a real business; its significance to the public, and consequently its profitableness, is gone.

Where the Banker Helps and Hurts

The penetration of the banker's viewpoint into the industry has been both a blessing and a curse. It is a blessing in that, with the industry having attained its present magnitude, it contributed a scope of financial vision which the industry did not have. It is a curse because the seemingly non-technical nature of the business has encouraged various arrivals from the financial world to display a knowing attitude about the business, particularly production, which would not have been disclosed in another field where the subject matter did not have the popular and disarming aspects of motion pictures.

Thus far the pentration of the banker's viewpoint into the Hollywood scene has performed a valuable service with one conspicuous exception.

It has, of course, contributed importantly in various of the intricate problems of production finance. In league with other active agencies in the business it has assisted in making Hollywood cost conscious—profoundly so. It has been both a stimulating and a heartening influence in other directions. All of these items list on the credit side of the ledger. On the debit side, the banker's viewpoint, which has been so widely expressed in Hollywood, has created an anxiety and an uneasiness which have been most destructive. Morale is as important to a successful Hollywood as it is to a successful army. In mixing into distinctly technical matters without the necessary technical knowledge and experience bank influence has defeated precisely the end which it has sought.

Unrevealed Ability Awaits the Task

Among the realignments in the Hollywood situation which obviously are needed is a decentralization of producing operations.

Despite the generally admitted fact that the tremendous detail involved in a group of about ten pictures to be produced within a year is the extreme limit for mastery by any single individual, there are various studio executives who still hold themselves responsible, or are held responsible, for the entire output of a studio, comprising in the neighborhood of fifty pictures a year.

PRACTICALLY NO STUDIO EXECUTIVES

The scarcity of admittedly qualified production executives in Hollywood would seem to suggest that the production of motion pictures, singly among the difficult tasks to which man addresses himself, is one in which only an absurdly small number of persons are or can be experts. This, of course, is not so. Given reasonable opportunity there are thousands of persons who could stand shoulder to shoulder with at least the majority of the persons who are now making pictures.

The difficulty in this connection seems to be that only the full-blown producing genius need apply. Unless his asking price is two or three thousand dollars a week it seems to be considered a waste of time to expect anything of him. The rarified atmosphere of upper executive control of production is an exclusive circle. We do not think that the reigning executives have altogether consciously determined that it shall be so, but nevertheless that is the condition. The press of hour by hour detail—where detail involves decisions of a financial importance which cause executives in many other businessness to cogitate for a week—is such that there is no time left in which to lend a helping hand to a junior executive; no time left for that development of "younger men" without which business management the world over must come to a standstill.

There are practically no executives in Hollywood! Almost without exception the men who enjoy the highest executive titles are just as busy with all of the practical details of production as any workers in the ranks.

Unless motion picture production occupies some wholly unique position in the field of human endeavor it is possible to have assistants who can carry out the plans and policies prescribed by the executive councils. And, of course, it does not. Production has drifted dangerously within the immediate control of a few men because they have permitted it to do so and have done little or nothing to change the trend.

Here is a condition which calls loudly and insistently for attention. Upon its successful correction depends the solution of many problems which have interfered, and which continue to interfere, with the required progress in production.

Hollywood Brand of "Writer's Cramp"

The coming of dialogue, bringing with it an entirely new form and treatment for the motion picture story, placed the profession of the writer very distinctly down-stage, center. The producer who in most cases had been but little accustomed to the exact use of either the printed or the spoken word was somewhat bewildered. The acute stage of bewilderment has passed but there still remains much to be done in the highly important task of coordinating the writer and his handiwork with the business of producing motion pictures.

Virtually everywhere among the studios we encounter the amazing state of affairs in which non-writers are telling writers how to write—not novice writers but qualified and experienced authors. It is true that many of these writers are not long acquainted with the medium of the screen but there are many others who have had as much experience—and success—in the medium of the screen as the producers who sit in judgment on their work.

It has been remarked that with the coming of sound everything in Hollywood was changed except the producers. This distum while amounting mainly to a wisecrack does, in fact, shed a bit of illumination on the problems of the writers in production.

With the coming of sound the new motion picture became a different form of expression. It look on added elements of other forms of literary expression. It required in the writer something of the short-story creator and something of the playwright. These new elements were decidedly less foreign to writers who had long been dealing with them than to producers upon whom they had burst like a clap of thunder. Yet many producers, simply by virtue of executive authority, proceeded to deal with these strange, new elements as if they had always been an integral part of their profession.

The Code Neglected and Scorned

"There is decidedly too much of the attitude of expediency in the disposition of most of the producers toward the Code. Several of the producers had little idea of the significance of the agreement at the time it was adopted; they did not know what it meant or why it should be impressed upon production. Many of these have continued to regard it only as an allegedly necessary evil which has the habit of getting into their way in the most inconvenient times and places. . . ."

The result, in a vast number of cases, has been pretty sad. The qualified writers, from whom is asked the highest order of creative intelligence which goes into the making of a motion picture, have been compelled to sit back and listen while they are being told how, when and what. It is no credit to them that they have not rebelled and taken the first train back to their studio, magazine or newspaper office. That many of them have not done this is explainable only by the golden lure which is attached to continued identification with the Hollywood scene. Had they departed an emergency would have been created which would have hastened a solution of the problem. In remaining, their work has continued to suffer and consequently pictures have suffered.

It has been declared, and with considerable authority, that not one of the leading writers in Hollywood is doing or can do his best work in the conditions under which he now works.

Some Salaries That Are Just Habits

Production costs have generally been lowered. It has been conservatively estimated that under the order of the day costs have been lowered to a point at which a saving of approximately twenty percent is being effected.

In this connection let there be no misunderstanding that this was any easy and routine job; it has only been accomplished by virtue of prodigious effort and determination. Of course, the strained economic order of the day furnished the stimulus behind this effort. On this account the industry may acknowledge due gratitude to Depression. But even with the finger of stern necessity pointing the way the road of retrenchment has been a most arduous one.

Under carefully laid plans every individual item of expense in the making of a motion picture has been brought under sharp scrutiny. In the days of prosperity the salaries of many players, directors and writers had soared to heights which even the principals would not undertake to defend as being within reason. These salaries and allied contract arrangements are being attended to in all practicable ways.

The one great danger lying along the road of retrenchment as it is now being vigorously followed is the possibility—more native to the banker's mind than to that of the showman—of arriving at arbitrary conclusions as to the cash value of attractions. By attractions we do not, of course, mean the incidental player however valuable he or she may be. These do indeed contribute mightily to production values. But their worth must be rated by an entirely different formula than that to be applied in the case of the great outstanding personality who by popular acclaim has been made a star and to whom the public is willing to pay dollar homage via the box office. There is not now and there never will be any cut-and-dried formula for calculating the worth of such a personality in the entertainment business. These personalities are the vital spark of the business. To attempt to rate them differently is to plunge a knife-blade into the throat of the Golden Goose.

But where salary lists do need attention, cold-bloodedly, is in that vast number of cases where political manipulation, intrigue and bull-dozing have enabled lesser people, valuable enough in their own way, to attempt and to succeed in relating their salaries to those standards which are based upon actual attraction values at the box office. The total of the expenditures in this direction is enormous and a very great part of it represents a dead loss to the business of motion pictures.

Then, on the matter of studio costs, there is this thing which cries to the heavens for adjustment:

Reference is made to that strange brand of reasoning which figures that simply because a person is identified with a studio, and not with a boiler or cheese factory, that his salary should attain some dizzy height, due in some measure to the old-fashioned notion that there are millions in the movies.

There are many cases, fewer now than formerly but still many, in which persons employed in a studio are paid five times the salary they would receive for identical work elsewhere. The reasoning would seem to be that almost everyone employed in or about production has been touched with the spark of creative genius and consequently his compensation should not be based on any of the commonly accepted standards in the industry but must be given some fantastic proportion simply because he is in production.

Entirely aside from the creative work on motion pictures and entirely aside from those persons who possess attraction value, salary practices in Hollywood have run riot. And it is not even surprising that this should be so. Again, the nature of the business has so ordered it. Fantastic standards of all kinds rule high-handedly in Hollywood. The community is money-mad. Income is the only passport that is required, publicly or privately. But—there is no need for undue excitement! The nature of the business and the contagion which it spreads among its workers are not going to be changed overnight—and, possibly, not at all.

But at this time when the industry as a whole is fighting desperately to keep its place in the sun there must be an imposition of normalcy where normalcy is possible. And it is indeed possible to see to it that the ordinary worker is paid on a scale based on what he produces and not on some fantastic theory incidental to the fact that his activities happen to be carried on in the general vicinity of where creative work is taking place.

Playing Tag with the Code

Various Hollywood manifestations point to the fact that Hollywood's tastes have consistently grown less representative of the tastes of the rest of the country.

This fact is both readily noticeable and at the same time is seriously arresting.

No graver danger to the industry is conceivable than that this drift should go on unchecked.

It is probably because of this lack of representative viewpoint that the record of performance under the Production Code, adopted in the Spring of 1930, has been so disappointing. Viewing the Production Code in the light of what has been accomplished is not disappointing but, on the contrary, substantially encouraging. The disappointing aspect of the development is the fact that so much which is vitally important has been left undone.

There is decidedly too much of the attitude of expediency in the disposition of most of the producers toward the Code. Several of the producers had little idea of the significance of the agreement at the time it was adopted; they did not know what it meant or why it should be impressed upon production. Many of these have continued to regard it only as an allegedly necessary evil which has the habit of getting into their way in the most inconvenient times and places. Some of them have plainly and definitely ignored it—not perhaps as a general rule but under such circumstances as suited their pleasure.

The result of this has been that much of the great good-will which the enactment of the Code brought to the industry has been sacrificed. The rising tide of censorship has not been turned back but it has risen to more menacing heights. And—in a very practical sense—it has permitted the making of product that has not been wanted by the vast majority of the public—product which in no small measure has accounted for decreasing patronage at the theatres.

Faithful conformance with the Code would have eliminated all censorship which could lay any claim to sanity and reasonableness. But instead of thus protecting the industry from the cost, delay and destructive interference of censorship, the producers have given the censors more material which demanded their attention during the past year than in any previous year.

Producers would do well to remember that when they announced the Code they made a solemn commitment to abide by its provisions. There no longer rests with them the option of conforming or not, as they see fit. They can, it is true, tell the public that they have changed their minds. Also they can go on, as in several instances they have, which will amount to the same thing. But in either case they will face an attack which is very likely to leave the industry so severely hedged in, curbed and harassed that its activities and its potential profitableness will hardly resemble what it has been and what, under other circumstances, it may continue to be.

Hollywood Target for Random Shots

It would seem from these notes—and it is true—that there is much in the Hollywood situation which cries aloud for sane, reasonable and constructive action. But the blame-it-all-on-Hollywood attitude is not the type of treatment that is warranted or is in any way likely to produce the desired results. Much of the criticism that is levelled at Hollywood is casual, random and inexpert. Much of it issues from persons who have not taken the trouble to learn enough about Hollywood to be able to understand the complexities of its problems. Such criticism, readily identified locally as being uninformed, serves no purpose other than the irritation of that large group of exceedingly able executives who have come to grips with the great and intricate problems which attend the production of motion pictures under existing circumstances.

There is no harder working industrial community the world over than Hollywood. There is concentrated there in no small measure a high order of creative intelligence and practical showmanship. It has been the mainspring of the industry's prosperity and there is no reason for even suspecting that it will not continue to be. But there is much to be done in order to accomplish the needed and timely readjustment to changed conditions—just as there is everywhere else throughout the world of commerce and industry.

What the rest of the industry can best contribute to the Hollywood situation is—less heat and more light; less random criticism and more sound and sober thought on the problems of production and how they may best be solved.

Freuler Proposes Inter-use of Studio

Interchangeable use of studios, reduction of the number of mammoth stages to production needs and further cooperation of the largest companies with independents would do much to effect economy in Hollywood, says John R. Freuler, president of Big 4.

"No picture that is conscientiously produced from a selection of well weighed material, from carefully balanced casts, from overhead that begins when production begins, and ceases when the camera ceases, that carries not too many thousands of feet of unusable negative and no high salaried stars' contracts, should fail to make money for its sponsors," Freuler said.

Fairbanks Cancels Travelogue Plans; Will Return This Month

Douglas Fairbanks has decided to cancel his plans for a new travelogue, at least temporarily. He cabled Mary Pickford at Hollywood that he would arrive by Christmas.

It is said the Sino-Japanese trouble in Manchuria caused the change of plans. Lewis Milestone will return immediately to Hollywood. Fairbanks will remain in Europe until his return.

Eyes on Capital As Congress Opens

The text of the President's message to Congress, upon convening at Washington on Monday, and financial recommendations of Secretary of the Treasury Andrew Mellon are anxiously awaited by industry in general, which expects to find in both an indication of the trend to be followed in new taxation which is said to be needed to meet a deficit of $825,302,000.

Motion picture theatres cannot shoulder a 10 per cent tax, it is understood, and because of this it is held unlikely in Washington circles that anti-industry factions will be successful if any attempts are made to enact theatre taxation.

In addition to the pending Federal legislation, revenue bills affecting the industry have been prepared or are in prospect in ten states. All the pending state legislation contemplates or threatens theatre taxation as one source of revenue for either emergency state relief funds or for aiding depleted state treasuries.

The following states are considering legislation of this kind: Wisconsin, Illinois, Tennessee, New York, Kentucky, Indiana, California, Virginia, Pennsylvania, and Rhode Island. Legislatures of all ten are either now in session or will convene before the first of the year.

Four Houses in Kansas Town Open Sunday on Law Repeal

Four theatres in Arkansas City, Kas., are opening on Sunday for the first time in years, following the repeal by the city commission of the blue laws.

The move adds impetus to the state movement for repeal of similar prohibition, which will shortly be decided by the state and federal courts. Fox Midwest plans to open on Sundays, protected by restraining orders.

MOTION PICTURE HERALD recommends to its readers who may hold stock in Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation that, unless a more favorable plan of re-financing is submitted by persons of responsibility, they support the company plan by forwarding proxies to the company.

Application for Receiver Belittled by all Factions

Hiram Brown Says Future of Corporation Is Assured If Financing Plan Is Adopted; Promises Quality Films

Highlights of the Radio-Keith-Orpheum refinancing situation on Wednesday were as follows:

1. Opposing minority stockholders group recommended adoption of the financing plan as submitted by RCA, with certain modifications forwarded to RKO.

2. Stockholders were requested by RKO and by the minority group to rush proxies favoring the plan, minority group on condition the modifications were adopted.

3. Application was made at Baltimore for the appointment of a receiver in equity for Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corp.

4. Minority group belittled the suit. Hiram Brown, RKO president, denied mismanagement charges contained in application.

5. Brown told reporters that the future of the corporation is assured if the refinancing plan is adopted, and promised a new high standard of quality in future motion pictures made by RKO.

6. All employees of RKO and subsidiaries drafted in nationwide campaign to get proxies favoring the refinancing plan.

7. Physical merging of Radio Pictures and RKO Pathe continues.

In a second bid for public confidence the intimate financial affairs and organizational policies of Radio-Keith-Orpheum were again submitted to a reportorial inquisition at the corporation's home office on Wednesday. For 65 minutes, Hiram S. Brown, RKO president, who has just returned from a Hollywood sojourn, faced 20 reporters and financial writers, representing the business and news press, retelling the urgency of company financing, reviewing events leading up to the emergency and detailing recent accomplishments and new plans for the company's future.

The session was similar in most details to that presided over by B. B. Kahane, RKO general counsel. It was marked by the same frankness in stating the company's position, the same absence of any attempt to evade questioning, however pertinent or impertinent, and resolved itself into another effort to convince the press that the company's proposed plan of refinancing is ac-

EXHIBITORS MUST DECIDE PROBLEM OF DOUBLE BILL, SAY DISTRIBUTORS

Final Totals Are Seen Increasing Benefit Grosses

Partial returns from some 25 key centers over the country, covering only sales at theatre box offices and not accounting for tickets sold by local organizations, indicate that approximately $500,000 has been realized as a result of the industry's Motion Picture Week, with several thousand theatres contributing the receipts of benefit performances for unemployed relief.

This figure, which at this time can only be an estimate, is unofficial. Complete and official returns from the entire country will not be available until the end of the week, probably December 5. The total is expected to be very materially increased when final figures are released.

The New York total is expected to reach better than $100,000. Other large key city totals, estimated, include: Boston, $21,000; Baltimore, $21,000; Cleveland, $14,000; Milwaukee, $42,000; Rochester, $11,500; Philadelphia, $17,000 and the Philadelphia area, $65,000. Camden, in that territory, turned in an estimated $3,000 and Wilkes-Barre and Scranton, $10,000.

The Salt Lake City territory reported an estimated total of $25,000. Denver was hard hit by a blizzard and zero weather on the night of the benefit performances. Pittsburgh totaled and estimated $17,000 and Minneapolis $11,000.

Suburbs of Boston are expected to contribute something approximating the $21,000 gathered in the city, with the theatres in the various communities turning over their proceeds to the several local committees.

Estimated totals and final figures in certain cities as reported up to Monday follow:

Rochester	$11,500
Boston	21,000
Baltimore	21,000
Pittsburgh	17,000

Declare Concerted Move Might Hit Court Snag

Propose Alternative of Voluntary Elimination or Confining Practice to Subsequent Runs

Control or elimination of double featuring rests with exhibitors, larger distributors decided following conferences on the subject in New York. Legal opinion was advanced that any collective effort on the part of distributors to regulate the practice could be construed as conspiracy and would stand little chance if contested in the courts.

Significant exhibitor and distributor opinion adverse to double featuring had held that distributors were in the best position to eliminate the practice, if it was to be eliminated, and the conferences, held in conjunction with the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors Association, were called to discuss plans for action. It was held that, whereas distributors individually could withhold their product where intended for use on a double-feature program, no collective effort of the kind could be enforced legally.

Voluntary Action Is Alternative

The alternative, it was brought out at the distributors' conferences, was voluntary action among exhibitors who desired the control or elimination of the policy. This action, they said, could take either of two forms: voluntary agreements on the part of exhibitors to refrain from double featuring, or regulated use of the policy by setting back availability dates of theatres employing it, thereby confining the policy to subsequent runs.

It was pointed out that distributors, individually, already have sought to control double featuring in certain localities by incorporating in their sales contracts specific prohibitions against double featuring the product. Paramount prohibits the double featuring of its product in certain localities, it was revealed, and similar efforts at curbing the practice have been made by MGM and others at various times.

Can't Be National Plan

This method, distributors declare, cannot be employed nationally, however, to good advantage due to the number of situations existing in which double featuring is an established practice. An individual exhibitor, or a smaller number of them, could not enforce a double featuring ban in these situations without suffering a loss of sales, which would react to the benefit of his competitors who continued to permit double featuring of their product and, moreover, would accomplish nothing toward eliminating the practice. If all distributors attempted to enforce the ban the move could be attacked legally as conspiracy, it was said.

It was also pointed out that exhibitors, on the other hand, are successfully regulating the practice among themselves in several situations. In Cleveland and northern California, where the practice is widespread, exhibitors have confined it to subsequent-runs with satisfactory results.

Inasmuch as this latter method is best accomplished by uniform zoning and protection agreements it is being opposed by a large number of Allied States exhibitors. A spokesman for this organization, on record as being vigorously opposed to double featuring, stated that Allied exhibitors would refuse to participate in any attempt to eliminate double featuring by zoning or protection agreements, regardless of their desire to abolish double bills.

"Allied's position," he said, "is that it will not enter into an illegal agreement even to accomplish something beneficial."

William Fox Denies Part in Company Begun by Brother

Announcement of the formation of Aaron Fox Film Corporation by the brother of William Fox, and incorporated in Delaware with $10,000,000 capitalization, for production and exhibition, was followed this week by the following statement by William Fox, through Murry C. Becker, of the law firm of Hirsh, Newman, Reass and Becker, personal attorneys for William Fox:

"I have no connection, financial or otherwise, with the Aaron Fox Film Corporation, or any other business enterprises or business ventures of Aaron Fox.

"I do not want the public to gather the impression," Becker quoted William Fox as stating, "even by a suggestion, that I have any connection with any of the enterprises of Aaron Fox."

The former president of Fox Film Corporation, through Becker, said the formation of the Aaron Fox company came as a complete surprise to him. His first knowledge of the enterprise, he said, came to him through the formal announcements in the trade and daily press.

William Fox, according to Becker, anticipates no connection with the enterprise and, for the present at least, is planning no new activities, or renewal of former interests in the business. The announcement of the new organization bearing the name of his brother will have no effect whatsoever on his present inactivity, Becker insisted.

The announcement regarding the Aaron Fox concern said that the projection was on an international scale; that a studio was to be acquired in Hollywood, exchanges will be established in key cities and theatres built or acquired in a number of keys, with admissions ranging from 10 cents to a top of 50 cents. New York, Pittsburgh, Boston, Philadelphia, Cleveland, Chicago, Detroit, St. Louis, Rochester, Denver and Seattle are among cities where the new firm is said to be planning a theatre foothold.

HORNE ON THE COLLINS TECHNIQUE

United Artists Advertising and Publicity Director Makes Observations on Selling Copy

By HAL HORNE

The merry business of discussing the observations of Mr. Kenneth Collins, the spectacular advertising manager and executive vice-president of R. H. Macy & Company, reported in these pages a fortnight ago, is proceeding vigorously. Last week Mr. S. Charles Einfeld of Warner Brothers took his pen in hand, in both hands in fact. Here and now Mr. Hal Horne, director of publicity and advertising for United Artists Corporation, with a shade more sympathy with the Collin's school of the art, sets forth some views as to why he thinks the motion picture can't be sold like salt shakers. Mr. Horne does interestingly, suggest that maybe the motion picture copy might get a little more gay, seeing that all other merchandisers have gone in for showmanship, too. TERRY RAMSAYE

HAL HORNE

One of these days I'm going down to Macy's and buy something. If I do, it'll be because I've gotten to like the darn old place. Those ads have done it. They're my meat—and I'm a vegetarian.

And if I make that purchase, it won't be on account of the underselling angle, either. Six per cent off is no inducement to one who is 50 per cent off 90 per cent of the time.

It'll be simply because day in and day out I read about the Macy'as so blithesomely described by Mr. Collins and his well-figured ladies (those five-figure salaries sure make them attractive to me) and while, for the time being, I have no immediate need for salt-shakers, bob-sleds or similar gadgets, it may be possible that sooner or later they'll hit on something I DO need, and then? Down Broadway I'll rush, shouting, "Kenneth, I hear you Collins me."

There's no question about it. Collins and his crew have done a grand job. In the face of the depression they've built up a staggering business. All with the gay, lightsome things they say in their advertising. Were the rise of Macy's picturized by Hollywood, the production could well be titled "From Gags to Riches."

BUT—There is a difference between picturing merchandise and merchandising pictures.

First of all, a store like Macy's has MANY things to sell. A picture theatre has but ONE thing to sell. A department store may buy a large quantity of one article and a limited quantity of another, varying the amounts with what experience has taught them might be sold. A picture theatre is compelled to buy one picture at a time, whether it feels that two thousand people may come to see it, or ten thousand. And all the theatre has to sell is that one picture.

A department store may wax lightly about some article that lends itself to such treatment, making the copy attractive, and the price, too, knowing that people will come not only to purchase that particularly thing, but a lot of other things as well. This is shown in the large amount of unadvertised articles that are sold each day. The theatre has no such leaders. It's the picture or nothing. Either the public will come for that one thing or they won't.

A department store may make claims about a salt shaker and the customers accept those claims as gospel truth. The theatre man may say something about his picture, but preceding his own statements thousands were previously printed in fan publications, newspapers and national magazines, telling the customers that the picture was good or it wasn't good. From the very moment the picture went into production, hundreds of correspondents in Hollywood writing to their syndicates, papers or magazines, kept telling their millions of readers that the picture was shaping up wonderfully or was turning into a dud.

Reverting to that salt-shaker again, supposing stories kept appearing in New York publications telling millions of possible customers, that the shakers were not shaping up so nicely, that the holes were too large or too small, that they plugged up in damp weather and tarnished in hot weather, how far would the store's ads go towards getting people to buy them?

Mr. Collins may be interested to know that 14 of the leading motion picture fan publications alone reach over 6,000,000 readers each issue—that daily newspapers featuring movie stuff reach 36,000,000 readers each day—that Sunday newspapers totalling 20,000,000 circulation give movie news to that many readers weekly, that thousands of additional newspapers and magazines reaching many, many additional millions of readers keep telling the public to go to see that picture or to stay away. Which means that the public's mind has been pretty well set before the picture is ever shown.

So, we haven't the opportunity to sell many things at one particular time. We can't pick leaders on any particular day. We can't toss off lightly statements previously printed; over 50,000,000 circulation can't be wrong.

Another problem we have is the time element. Department stores are never really stuck with an article. True, the very fact that they can control the amount of any one article they buy, permits them to gauge pretty well how long it will be before they can sell that one thing. But if that particular thing doesn't sell today or tomorrow or next week, it will sell some time. On the other hand, a picture is the most perishable thing on earth. As far as any particular theatre is concerned, and with few exceptions, a picture is born on a Friday, dies the following Thursday, and, as far as that particular theatre is concerned, may never live again. The theatre man must sell it quickly. He must get his selling arguments over in the shortest length of time. And he must get ALL of his selling points over before the picture opens. After that, he is at the mercy of word-of-mouth advertising. And the quality of such mercy is not restrained.

A department store builds good-will and caters to thousands of people who HAVE to have things and who come to a particular store because they have come to like that store. In building such good-will, work like that being done by Mr. Collins is a tremendous factor. But theatres have very little good-will per se. Having nothing to sell but the picture, naturally the picture is all that the public will pay to see. Glance at the box-office receipts of any given theatre. The differential between the low and high gross will amaze you. The largest theatre in the world shows its lowest week's receipts to be $44,000 as against its highest week's gross of $167,000!

Another thing the theatre advertising man has to face is opposition—the worst sort of opposition—PRICE! How jubilant would a department store merchandiser feel if, in offering a salt-shaker for 50 cents today, he knew that his customers KNEW that in a few weeks they could buy that same shaker at their neighborhood store for half the price?

Them's problems, stranger!

But has the picture advertiser failed in his attempts to meet them? Let's see!

First, let's take the names of picture companies.

Walk up to any person on the street and ask him to name them off to you! Not only here—but in the smallest village in the

OWNERS WAIT OPERATORS' VERDICT AS UNION VOTES ON SALARY SLASH

Unfavorable Reaction Is Expected in Many Spots

Voluntary Cut of 10 to 15 Per Cent Tabooed by Unanimous Vote of Theatrical Protective Union

President William Canavan of the I.A.T.S.E. & Motion Picture Operators, and his staff of executives may be in complete accord with regards a 10 to 15 per cent salary reduction for the organization's 25,000 projectionists and stagehands, but a considerable portion of the membership evidently is unable to enthuse over Canavan's proposal that they voluntarily adopt a lower scale for a period of 36 weeks.

At national headquarters, it is admitted that the reaction of members is unknown and will remain a mystery until the several hundred locals complete balloting late this week. Early returns are unfavorable, with the Theatrical Protective Union, which is the stagehands' division, voting unanimously to reject the proposal. Albany and Washington voted likewise and there is little likelihood of Chicago unions, and others which were forced to accept a cut when new contracts for 1931-32 were being negotiated, accepting President Canavan's recommendation.

The plan must be voted upon by members of the individual locals and cannot be made effective merely on the say-so of national headquarters, nor even upon the word of officials of the individual union branches.

Meanwhile, Providence and Pawtucket unions voted "yes" for the cut. In Chicago circles it was reported that there was little likelihood of the 1,500 operator members of that local accepting the cuts. It was believed, however, that stagehand members of the same local might take individual action on Canavan's proposal.

Late in October, Chicago operators accepted a 20 per cent cut in salaries in accordance with the settlement of the two-men-in-a-booth controversy which raged there for three months. By the terms of the same settlement, all Chicago theatres of less than 400 seats were permitted to operate with one instead of two projectionists.

Union locals affiliated with International were meeting all over the country this week to vote on acceptance or rejection of the proposal. Union headquarters in New York expected to be advised of the action taken by a majority of locals by the end of the current week. The rebate proposal if accepted by all would result in a saving of more than $1,000,000 to theatres, it was estimated.

As with the ten weeks' summer rebate of five to seven and one-half per cent of union salaries, the current proposal is of most significance to circuit rather than independent theatre operators. Individual locals have been advised that original rebate plans of their own may be offered in lieu of that proposed by Canavan, wherever the locals deem advisable.

Comparison of Net Income Reports of Five Companies for Nine Months

The following comparison of net income for the first nine months of this year by companies who have reported thus far is made this week in Wall Street Journal. Loew's and Warner Brothers reports are for nine months ended August 31, when their fiscal years close, while all others are for nine months ended September 30. Net income is after all charges, taxes, depreciation, etc., and the totals are in thousands, the last 000's being omitted:

Chicago Section of SMPE Elects '31-32 Officers

The Chicago section of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers has elected as officers for 1931-32: R. Fawn Mitchell, chairman; Burton W. Depue, secretary; Robert P. Burns and Oscar B. Depue, governors. J. Elliott Jenkins, retiring chairman, presided at the recent meeting at the Electric Association.

Jenkins read a paper on "Distortion in Glow Tube Recording Caused by Overloading."

The next meeting of the Chicago section will be held at the World's Fair Administration Building, December 5.

Two Circuits on Coast May Merge

The Golden State Theatre and Realty Corporation, San Francisco, which operates 40 houses there and in northern California, is to take over the T & D Junior Circuit of 20 houses, reliable reports indicate.

A total capitalization of $6,000,000 is said to be involved, with a new holding company to be formed to operate the combined circuits. Executive heads will be Eugene Emmick, president, and R. H. McNeill, vice president and general manager of Golden State, and Mike Naify, T & D general manager. The Nassor Theatre Circuit and San Francisco houses operated by Sam and Al Levin, which are connected with the T & D Junior group, are understood not to be included in the deal, which is said to have been pending for some months.

Two African Film, Theatre Concerns Merge in January

Africa's two largest film companies and circuits, African Theatres and Kinemas, Ltd., bitter opponents in the domination of the South African field, will be merged on January 4, 1932.

The merged interests will be managed by African Consolidated Theatres, Ltd., a new company about to be formed. The directors of African Theatres, Ltd., and Kinemas, Ltd., will join the board of the new company with I. W. Schlessinger as permanent chairman and managing director. Under the merger agreement the new company does not acquire the theatres or any of the real estate properties of either African Theatres, Ltd., or Kinemas, Ltd., but the new company is granted leases over the several hundred combined houses. The new company, African Consolidated Theatres, Ltd., does not assume any of the liabilities of either African Theatres, Ltd., or Kinemas, Ltd. A new company, African Consolidated Films, Ltd., is also to be formed to manage the joint film interests of both Kinemas Ltd., and African Films, Ltd., on similar lines and control as the above.

Pacent Develops Combination Recording, Reproducing Device

Pacent announces in "Recordovox" a new combination recording and reproducing device to work with any radio receiver and phonograph. The attachment is for electrical reproduction of home records as well as the commercial and allows for the making of home records of voice, music or radio programs.

"A Sucker Bet!"

Abram F. Myers, president of Allied States Association, in a signed editorial in "The Allied Exhibitor," titled "A Sucker Bet," says in part:

"After having urged caution on Allied members for almost three years because of the uncertain outlook for the future, I risked my reputation as an economist and a prophet at the Michigan Convention early in October by declaring that, in my opinion, the bottom of the depression had been reached and we had at last started on the upgrade.

"Coming on the heels of a stock market recession that had carried many issues to the lowest level in many years, this declaration may have been interpreted as a hollow effort to inject a little cheerfulness into the gathering. It was, however, the statement of a studied conclusion based on accurate data gathered during a lenthy investigation.

"With our boundless natural resources, our immense fertile areas, our great productive capacity, and the skill and resourcefulness of our people, the United States simply cannot falter for long on the road of progress. You may grumble all you like about this country and the way it is run, but you cannot name a better one.

"There is absolutely no justification for lack of confidence in the United States of America and its future. Persons who, because of this temporary set-back are "moaning low," preaching defeatism, hoarding their resources or using the slump as an alibi for avoiding their obligations, are betting against the United States.

"And that is a sucker bet!"

Pittaluga Reported Facing Loss of Banker Interest

The Italian producing company, Pittaluga, is reported to be in dire financial straits as a result of alleged indications that the Italian Banca Commerciale is desirous of withdrawing its holdings in the company. It is also reported that the Italian government has rejected a proposal that state funds be provided to assist Pittaluga.

Allied Leaders Ask Members' Desire On National Meeting

Allied leaders have received numerous inquiries as to whether or not they intend to hold a national convention similar to that held in Chicago last February.

The exhibitor leaders believe such a meeting should be held only in response to popular demand, and inquiry will be made of all independent exhibitors as to their wishes.

EXHIBITOR GROUP SEE END OF SCORE CHARGE

Permanent Committee of Exhibitors and Distributors Formed to Iron Out Difficulties

Elimination of score charges completely within one year, and a permanent committee of representative exhibitors and distributors to iron out difficulties arising between both factions, are the direct outgrowth of recent activities of the Continuing Committee which was named at the Hotel Astor several weeks ago to effect changes in alleged questionable distributing practices with regards percentage playing.

The Continuing Committee headed by Walter Vincent, of Wilmer & Vincent, circuit operators, officially made known its findings this week in the following statement:

"A meeting of the Continuing Committee named by the conference held at the Hotel Astor, sponsored by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Eastern Pennsylvania and Southern New Jersey, to receive a report of the chairman as to his conference with the various motion picture producing companies' distribution heads covering score charges, was held at the Bellevue Stratford Hotel in Philadelphia on Tuesday, November 24th.

"The chairman gave as nearly as possible the substance of his conversations with the distributors, omitting only that portion of such conversations as were considered by him to be personally confidential.

"After hearing the report, the committee jointly and severally expressed satisfaction and felt very confident that another year would see the elimination of this charge.

"It was suggested that a meeting of producers and exhibitors at this time could not fail to be of value to the industry, and that a full, free and frank discussion of joint problems would be productive of much good to all. The secretary was instructed to approach the various leaders of the industry and convey to them the thought of the committee in an endeavor to bring about such a meeting.

"The members of the committee were unanimous in the opinion that it should continue to function, in the belief that mistakes and abuses can only be corrected by ceaseless agitation. The chairman gave as his opinion that the growing recognition of the community of interest existing between producer and exhibitor would inevitably bring about just those reforms the committee was striving for."

M-G-M Calls "Lens" That Focuses Sound a Success

A "lens" that focuses sound as an ordinary lens focuses light is reported as an M-G-M development. It is said to take sound waves, break up light rays, and deflect them by practically the same process.

The "sound lens" is shaped like the prismatic lenses on lighthouse lamps, being a series of triangular pieces, but are of wood instead of glass. The "lens" was first devised to control high trumpet notes in orchestrations for "The Cuban Love Song."

Money's Worth!

Columbus, Ohio, picture theatre patrons are getting double plus value for their admission price this week at Loew's Ohio, if they never got it before. It's double feature plus. Two complete stage shows, "Great Guns," an elaborate revue and "The Cotton Pickers," colored orchestra are featured in addition to "Touchdown" on the screen, a 20-piece orchestra in the pit and organ solos. Usual 25 cent to 50 cent admission prices prevail.

B. and D. Finances Distributing Plan

British and Dominions Films, England, is forming an international financial organization to insure the company distribution throughout Europe.

T. Marsh is chairman and Herbert Wilcox one of the directors, which will bring together the British company and one of the biggest financial interests in Europe, representing French and German capital.

A number of pictures will be made each year in French and German, it is planned, the minimum being four, with production at the Elstree studios of B. and D. Distributing centers will be established in Paris and Berlin.

Westinghouse Wins Industrial Award

Westinghouse Electric's industrial relations program was adjudged one of the nation's best in a contest by B. C. Forbes, editor of Forbes Magazine, and entered by 380 companies.

The Westinghouse program includes a relief fund; a trusted savings fund, paying 6 per cent interest up to a certain savings total, thereafter 4 per cent; annuity for old age independence (the fund now is $2,500,000); an education and training plan; housing and building and loan; incentive plan for executive and supervisory force; a conservation of health plan; a program of miscellaneous welfare work in which is included the development and maintenance of proper dining facilities; a suggestion system; legal advice; and employment management conferences.

"Miniature De Luxe" Opened

The Shawno, new "miniature de luxe" 500-seater in Shawno, Wisc., has been opened as an experiment by W. L. Ainsworth, president of the company, who recently wrote an article, "What About the Little Fellow," which appeared in the Motion Picture Herald. The Shawno was built at a cost of approximately $40,000.

CALLS PRODUCTION OUTLOOK GOOD

tually an effort to avert receivership. The conference, also, constituted a petition for press aid in obtaining approval of the refinancing plan.

"If the plan is not adopted," said Brown, "the company cannot avoid receivership, in which case the organization undoubtedly would be disintegrated and its properties sold at sacrifice prices, with the result that no balance would remain for Class A stockholders. It constitutes the only possible method of giving stockholders a run for their money, for, if the company is permitted to continue in existence, it stands every chance of becoming a permanent earning organization."

Establishing justification for his optimism for the company's future, Brown cited savings and reduced working capital requirements running into millions as a result of the recent physical consolidation of Radio and RKO Pathe. Consolidation of production units, he said, will result in reducing working capital requirements and effecting savings of $2,500,000 during the next four months. Still further reductions in working capital requirements can be made after April 1, 1932, Brown said.

Consolidation of distribution organizations will effect a saving of $1,500,000 during 1932, he said. Other savings in administrative offices are in prospect, it was announced, with general salary reductions planned for all major executives. Brown's own salary will be reduced 40 per cent at the next meeting of the board of directors of RKO, he said. Other administrative executives will also take cuts of 40 per cent.

No Bonus This Year

Brown declared that no member of the RKO organization would receive a bonus this year. Last year, Brown said, he received a bonus of 8,000 shares of RKO stock.

"I still hold that stock," he added. "At its present market value of $2 per share my last year's bonus amounts to $16,000. This, added to my salary for the past three years that I have been with the company gives me an average annual income of about $90,000. I am the highest paid administrative executive. The treasurer of the company receives less than $20,000 per year."

Brown said that his salary is less than that paid William Le Baron, Radio production chief, and the salary now being paid David Selznick, production director of the combined studios, and "several other studio executives."

"But they are artists," Brown added, by way of explanation. "Creators are rightly of more value to this industry than its business men."

The RKO president made the statement that no salary reduction of small-salaried personnel was contemplated for the future.

"RKO," he said, "has always paid uniformly smaller salaries than other motion picture companies. It does not now believe anything beneficial can be accomplished by cutting 10 or 15 per cent from minor salaries."

It is RKO's intention, Brown said, to build up a strong producing organization and to operate it economically, but never to the point of sacrificing picture quality. In line with this policy, he said, very few reductions of salaries of players, directors or writers are contemplated.

"Realizing that the quality of pictures has contributed much to the present financial emergency," Brown said, "every effort will be made to establish a studio organization that will produce box office pictures. No economies which threaten the quality of production will be made. We have available now the best artists, producers and directors of the combined studios. We will add to this organization new directors, writers and players."

"RKO," he added, "does not wish to dodge responsibility for those things which contributed to its present financial difficulties and which, perhaps, might have been avoided. It is obvious that if we had had better pictures, their grosses would have been greater. We have been shy on producing ability; we haven't picked the right stories always, and when we did they were sometimes mistreated. Some of the fault has been my own. I am not a showman. I have not always selected showmen where they were most needed."

Plan Product Improvements

Brown then cited the plans of the company for improving product which, he said, would become one of the most important future activities of RKO, not only because of the normal expectancy of better individual picture earnings, but also because RKO theatres require them.

In reply to a question put to him by a reporter, and which Brown described as "impertinent" but proceeded to answer, nevertheless, the RKO president made it clear that David Selznick's studio authority is not to be questioned.

"Who," queried the reporter, "is boss of the studios, Selznick or Rogers?"

"That is an impertinent question," Brown replied. "Any producer who puts his name on a picture doesn't want to believe that anybody but God Almighty is his boss. However, the studios must have one individual to exercise authority. Selznick is that one. Charles Rogers will produce his own allotted number of pictures for Pathe. His contract, which expires in February, 1932, will be renewed."

Brown declared that the company's production outlook is so good that "if RKO gets by its present emergency, I am confident that product alone will make the company permanently safe, even though the current period of depression is prolonged."

Brown stated that the RKO theatres were earning money, in denying that theatre acquisitions had contributed in any way to the company's financial predicament. Retracing the company's three-year history, he said that the theatre department started with 91 theatres which were losing $100,000 a week at the height of the theatre season. RKO now has 181 theatres, Brown said, "and they are 'in the black'."

All later theatre acquisitions with the exceptions of the Pantages circuit in California and the Midland circuit in Texas are being operated at a profit, Brown said. "However," he added, "the Pantages' circuit gives us an outlet for our pictures on the Coast which we did not have before, and with the Midland houses they offer connecting links for our vaudeville bookings which are highly advantageous."

The RKO president defended the company's administration by recalling that it had come into being with only the 91 losing theatres. "It had no pictures, no sound studios, no outstanding talent of any kind. It required eight months for us to get started, and by the end of that time, a near panic was upon the country. We suffered from uncontrollable factors as well as from our own mistakes. We experienced abnormally warm weather which, prolonged, hurt theatre receipts materially. We suffered from the German financial situation; from the salary cuts made by United States Steel, and from all the other major economic ills which affected the public mind. In spite of all these adverse factors the company earned $1,800,000 in the two years and eight months following its organization."

The RKO president concluded his amazingly frank review, which was, as intended, a plea for press aid to obtain public sanction of the plan which, it is contended by RKO, is all that stands between preservation of the company and its extinction. Just as frankly, he proceeded to reply to the barrage of questions which followed his recital, refusing to answer only those which he said were not vital to the subject.

In response to queries, Brown admitted that all RKO employes were engaged in securing proxies for the stockholders' meeting to be held in Baltimore, December 10. He added that employes of Lehman Bros., RKO's bankers, and other banking companies associated with RKO, were also engaged in the search for proxies. Brown said there was a possibility that the stockholders' meeting might be postponed for "a few days" in the event the required two-thirds, or 1,600,000 shares of voting stock, had not been obtained by December 10.

Oppose Underwriting by RCA

Brown said that it is definitely known that RCA stockholders and even stockholders of General Electric are now opposed to the underwriting of the RKO refinancing by RCA, and that, inasmuch as the financing agreement provides that RCA may withdraw from participating in the refinancing of RKO in the event the latter's stockholders reject the plan, such withdrawal would be certain to follow adverse stockholder action.

"Inasmuch as RCA stockholders," Brown said, "are now of the opinion that the company's directors have placed it in an unwise financial situation by agreeing to the underwriting of this plan, it is hardly to be doubted that RCA will avail itself of its withdrawal privilege if the plan is not accepted. Definitely, then, that would mean the extinction of RKO."

Answering other queries, Brown said that there would be no change in the corporate name of the combined companies before the existing individual contracts of each had been carried to completion. He also advised that the Pathe rooster trade mark would be retained for Pathe product "at least until that company's contracts had been fulfilled," with final disposition of the trade mark still undecided. He said that the Pathe Culver City studios would be kept for "emergency uses," and that the studio offices would be utilized by scenario and accounting departments of the combined companies.

MISMANAGEMENT CHARGE IS DENIED

Mismanagement and extravagance are charged against Radio-Keith-Orpheum officers in a receivership suit against the corporation filed in the circuit court at Baltimore, Wednesday, by J. Cookman Boyd, Baltimore attorney. Boyd, the petition sets forth, is the owner of 300 shares of RKO Class A stock.

Judge Albert S. J. Owens, acting on the suit, gives RKO officers until December 22 to show cause why a receiver should not be appointed.

The suit alleges that the expenditure of millions for theatres and theatrical enterprises and the production of motion pictures was spent extravagantly, and that "reckless and willful expenditures and waste of the corporation's assets by the payment of large and excessive salaries to its officers and employes has been characterized by woeful incompetence and willful mismanagement on the part of the officers of the concern." In the suit the charge also was made that "highly excessive prices have been paid by the corporation in purchasing chain theatres."

The suit said that unless the court issues a restraining order and appoints a receiver, the company's assets would be dissipated and that it would be to the benefit and advantage of the stockholders to have a receiver manage the company's affairs and if necessary wind up the concern and distribute its assets.

J. Cookman Boyd was born in Baltimore in 1867. Educated in public schools, at Hopkins University and University of Maryland for Law. Admitted to bar, 1888.

Brown Denies Charge

President Hiram S. Brown late on Wednesday denied the mismanagement charge contained in the receivership application. He

"The officials of Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation have been informed that proceedings were today instituted in Baltimore seeking a receivership of the corporation. While we have not yet seen the papers which have been filed, we are informed that the proceedings have been brought by holders of only three hundred shares of stock, and that receivership is sought on the grounds that the corporation is unable to meet its present indebtedness and that the corporation has been mismanaged. We are confident that the charges of mismanagement cannot be sustained. The ability of the corporation to meet its financial requirements will depend on the putting into effect of the refinancing plan which has been submitted to the stockholders.

"The bringing of receivership proceedings should emphasize to all stockholders the necessity of forwarding proxies immediately so that the financing plan will be carried out."

Minority Issues Statement

Immediately following filing of the application, the RKO Stockholders Protective Committee, through Ray Bolton, its secretary, issued the following statement:

"While we do not regard seriously the application for receivership made in Baltimore by J. Cookman Boyd, we do feel that this makes it imperative for all stockholders to send in proxies at once to be used at the meeting on December 10, as the curtailment of financing which the committee recommends under its new modified plan of operation of the financing plan is necessary. For this reason, we urge all stockholders to send in proxies to this committee or to the corporation as we feel that the approval of the plan in its original form and operated in the modified method suggested by the committee is better for the stockholders than any form of management that would arise from a receivership."

Modifications Proposed

The RKO Protective Stockholders' Committee, will not submit a new plan of refinancing, but instead proposed on Wednesday adoption of the present plan as submitted by RCA, with certain modifications. These modifications, forwarded by Emerson & Sperling, minority attorneys, to B. B. Kahane, RKO vice president and legal counsel, are as follows:

December 2, 1931.

Mr. B. B. Kahane, Vice President,
Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation,
1560 Broadway,
New York City.

Dear Sir:

We have been instructed by our clients to forward to you the following proposed method of operation of the corporation's plan of financing announced to stockholders in the letter dated November 10th, acceptance of which by the management will result in the Committee's best efforts to aid you in securing enough proxies for the passage of the plan:

1. That the Corporation's management pledge itself not to use more than $5,600,000 of the proceeds of the sale of the debentures for the payment of the present or future obligations of the Corporation other than the $6,000,000 or secured gold notes of the Corporation.

2. That the Corporation pledge itself that thirty days prior to a call for the final payment of subscriptions to debentures under the plan, a call shall be made for the redemption of a proportionate share of the debentures so that the call price would be paid for the debentures which would equal the payment due from any stockholder under his subscription.

3. That by January 1, 1932, expenses of the Corporation other than depreciation, interest and discount and provisions for federal income taxes and dividends on the preferred stock of the subsidiary companies shall be reduced to 75 per cent of the total income of the Corporation.

4. That the Corporation give its cooperation and support to the formation of a stockholders association to the end that a Committee be appointed to supervise the sincerity of efforts made under 1, 2 and 3.

The committee, in making this proposal to the Corporation feels that it is offering a far more equitable plan to the stockholders than that outlined in the plan of the Corporation and is also permitting the Corporation to acquire under the plan all the financing that seems obviously necessary.

A prompt response will be as advantageous to you and the Corporation as it will to the Committee.

Sincerely yours,
EMERSON & SPERLING.

Immediately upon submission of the modifications to Kahane, the minority group dispatched a communication to all RKO stockholders, text of which follows:

December 2, 1931.

To Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation Stockholders:

Three weeks' investigation by your committee has resulted in the following conclusion:

1. That the present management of Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation has so tied up all assets of the Corporation and has otherwise conducted it so that a private loan or the underwriting of a public offering of securities is now an impossibility.

2. That the management has also contrived to put the Corporation in a position so that a receivership is possible at any time unless a limited amount of financing is secured.

Your committee has, therefore, submitted to the Corporation under this date a method of operation of the plan, as outlined in the letter of the Corporation to stockholders under date of November 10th, which it believes is possible and which will reduce by half the amount the stockholders will have to subscribe to the debentures in order to protect their equity in the corporation. Your comittee is unanimous in the opinion that expenses of the corporation can be reduced twenty five per cent below its operating income without impairing in any way the efficiency of operation or the quality of production.

Under the plan as announced but fifty percent of the total subscription must be paid at the time of subscribing. If the Corporation will give the pledges requested by this committee, the committee urgently advises all stockholders to subscribe to the limit permitted by their holdings on the basis of the partial payment plan. The calling for redemption of a sufficient amount of debentures coincident with the call for the final or semi-final payments on the subscriptions to the debentures obviates the necessity of any further payments by the stockholders. Your committee feels that it would be possible in a great number of cases to obtain assistance from banks in financing the payment of $2.50 a share, as in addition to the stock represented by your equity in the corporation, you will have a fifty per cent equity in a six percent debenture of $5.00 face value as collateral.

We urge you, as the time is short, to forward the proxy, mailed you by the corporation under the date of November 30th, to the RKO Stockholders Protective Committee, 55 W. 42nd Street, New York City, endorsing on the face of it, "I vote 'Yes' if the Corporation gives its pledge to the RKO Stockholders Protective Committee; otherwise I vote 'No'."

This request is made so that the committee will be in a position to lend its support to the plan if the method of operation of it suggested by the committee is accepted and the time will be too short after the committee has heard from the corporation as to its position in regard to the pledge to again further communicate with you.

Sincerely yours,
RKO STOCKHOLDERS PROTECTIVE COMMITTEE,
Secretary.

Proxies Still Sought

With a majority of proxies necessary for approval of the proposed RKO refinancing plan still to be sought, and with the stockholders' meeting at Baltimore, December 10, less than one week away, RKO executives are directing a far reaching, last minute drive for voting shares.

Enlisted in the drive are employes of all divisions of RKO throughout the country, who have been supplied with lists of stockholders in their localities. RKO employes have been officially instructed that the task of visiting these stockholders, of whom there are 27,000, according to a statement as of November 23, is their most important duty between now and December 10.

The RKO employes were supplied with proxies and elaborate instructions on how best to approach stockholders and obtain their signatures for the proxies. Failing to do this, the employes are held responsible for explanations of why the proxies were refused. Exchange managers were authorized to employ additional help, if necessary, to complete the canvass of stockholders in their territories. Immediate reports on the progress of the canvass are being wired to the home office daily from all RKO agencies.

B. B. Kahane, RKO general counsel, on Wednesday, declined to reveal what percentage of the 2,100,000 voting shares required for the approval of the refinancing plan had been heard from, but an urgent letter to stockholders signed by Hiram S. Brown, RKO president, and sent out this week was taken to indicate that the return of proxies is progressing slowly. Contributing to this impression was the urgency and importance of obtaining proxies impressed upon RKO employes in the field.

The letter to stockholders expressed the fear that "the publicity given in the press to the possibility of a new alternative plan being proposed (by an opposing minority group) will lead stockholders to delay in sending in their proxies in the hope that some new plan will be presented." The letter continued with an assurance that if any such new plan is presented "which is in the judgment of the board of directors more favorable to stockholders than that heretofore submitted, and which assures the corporation that the necessary funds will be provided, such plan will be presented to the stockholders even if stockholders have already sent in their proxies in favor of the present plan."

The company's proposed plan calls for the purchase of $11,600,000 of debentures by stockholders and approval of a plan whereby the present stock would be reduced on a basis of four for one and the approximate value of the retired three shares issued to purchasers of the debentures. The Radio Corporation of America, RKO parent company, is the underwriter of the plan, which is being opposed by a minority stockholders' organization.

Thomas J. Shanley, employed at various times on financial assignments for major distributors, has been retained by the RKO Stockholders' Protective Committee, representing the opposition, to analyze RKO's financial needs as outlined in the company's letters to stockholders and in a breakdown of operating expense supplied the committee by Kahane.

In statements issued by the Protective Committee it was made plain that there is some doubt on the part of the minority holders that RKO's financial needs are as great as the letters to stockholders indicate. RKO has advised stockholders that the company faces receivership unless the required funds are obtained.

Brown came to New York from the Coast studio this week ostensibly to direct the company's drive for proxies and to prepare for the stockholders' meeting of December 10.

Meanwhile, consolidation of Pathe with Radio Pictures continued to progress both in New York and Hollywood. Field sales forces have been readjusted already on a working basis, with new district and branch managers undertaking their new assignments and branch sales and office personnel reduced and reorganized.

The Pathe home office personnel was reduced by approximately 150 this week, and transfer of departments from the Pathe building to the Radio offices was completed. About 20 persons were let out of the Pathe advertising and publicity department in a move that left only A. P. Waxman, publicity head, and Rutgers Neilson, assistant, retained by the consolidated organization. Waxman is said to be slated for a post in short subject production as soon as current advertising and exploitation campaigns on new Pathe productions have been completed. Neilson will be permanently assigned to advertising and publicity under Hy Daab, who remains in charge of the department.

Retained from other departments are Amos Hyatt, assistant Pathe treasurer, who has been assigned to the accounting department of the new organization, and E. H. Goldstein, former assistant to Lee Marcus. C. J. Scollard has also been assigned to a post at the Radio offices.

Eliminations included Tom Gorman, Pathe sales contact for RKO theatres, and Lou Snitzer, formerly in charge of Pathe accessories.

Eight floors of the old Pathe building will continue to be occupied by the combined company. Pathe News will occupy two and one-half floors; Pathe-Du Pont, two floors; combined foreign department, one floor; combined accounting department, one floor, and purchasing and research departments, one floor each.

Executive, distribution and advertising-publicity offices have been combined in the Bond Building, at 1560 Broadway, Radio Pictures, home office. Congested conditions in the Palace Theatre building may be relieved later by removing some of the RKO vaudeville offices to unoccupied space in the Pathe building.

Meanwhile, David Selznick, generalissimo of production at Hollywood, continued reorganization of the combined studio forces. This week he added King Vidor to the directorial roster, making "Bird of Paradise" starring Dolores Del Rio, as his first. Merian C. Cooper, producer of the Cooper-Schoedsack combination, was also given an RKO contract, working under Selznick as associate producer.

Receiver Named For Kinograms in Involuntary Action

An involuntary petition in bankruptcy was returned against Kinograms newsreel in New York Circuit court on Wednesday. The court appointed the Irving Trust company of New York as receiver. No estimate of company assets was available at the time of going to press.

It is understood that a city marshal served a writ of attachment on Kinograms Wednesday, attaching the film library and office furniture of the company, which was claimed by creditors.

Receivers Named In Skouras Suit

Jeffie W. Barrett, former attorney general for the state of Missouri, and Walter H. Nohl, lawyer, have been appointed by Circuit Judge Granville Hogan, St. Louis, to serve as co-receivers for Skouras Brothers Enterprises.

Judge William Dee Becker of the St. Louis court of appeals had previously declined the appointment. Harry C. Barter was named as referee in the case to fill the vacancy caused by the appointment of Barrett as one of the receivers. Each of the latter filed bond of $25,000 and the court issued an order restraining the interested group from any interference with the receivers.

RKO Sued for $500,000 by Cincinnati Hotel Company

The Hotel Gibson Company, Cincinnati, has filed suit for $500,000 against the Cino Theatre Company and the Radio-Keith- Orpheum Corporation for alleged violation of contract in failure of the defendants to tender for execution a lease on the Fountain Square Hotel, part of the RKO Albee theatre property.

In New York, B. B. Kahane, RKO counsel, said that last July preliminary negotiations were entered into with the Gibson company, when the present tenants of the property involved, were undecided on the possibility of their remaining. They have since agreed to retain possession, however, and negotiations with the Gibson company have been dropped, according to Kahane. The latter claims no contract was made with the plaintiff company, the discussion never going beyond the preliminary stage.

Brady Claims the Mayor Would Permit New York Sunday Shows

William A. Brady, veteran New York theatrical producer, speaking at a meeting of the Drama Club this week, said that Mayor Walker had informed him that if the Actors' Equity Association would withdraw its opposition to Sunday shows, he would permit them.

Brady also said that the mayor insisted he would close all other forms of Sunday entertainment if there was any interference with the shows, following a possible opening.

British Company Writes Off Loss

The accounts just issued by the directors of British Instructional Films (Proprietors, Ltd.) for the 14 months ended May 31, 1931, reveal a provision for losses incurred by the previous company, British Instructional Films, Ltd. of £70,983. The old company was taken over by the new company in February last, together with "Pro Patria" Films, Ltd., its former distributing agent, and a working agreement was entered into with British International Pictures, Ltd.

The directors state that mainly because of the altered conditions arising from the establishment of sound films it has been necessary to face substantial depreciation in values of the production and stocks in hand and to provide in the accounts for the loss arising from this cause. For the same reason, the directors have revalued the fixed assets originally acquired by the company.

In the view of the directors it will be necessary "at a proper time" to undertake a reconstruction of the company's capital. John Maxwell of British International is one of the directors and is principally in charge of the company's present activities. The total share capital issued amounts to £213,392. There is a bank loan of £75,583 outstanding. The stockholders are to consider the report and accounts on November 27.—W. H. M.

Farm Price Boost Cheers Kansans

Advances in prices of agricultural commodities are an encouraging note for exhibitors in Kansas. The sharp recovery of a month ago has been checked somewhat by slight declines in wheat, but farmers are still more prosperous with wheat selling at 50 cents a bushel.

E. Van Hyning, president of the M.P.T.A. of Kansas and Western Missouri, says exhibitors throughout the state generally report an improvement.

Publix Northwest Censors Own Films

Publix has instituted its own censorship in its Northwest division centering in Minneapolis and St. Paul, and parts of pictures that might be considered objectionable in the smaller cities are eliminated after the downtown showings in the Twin Cities and Duluth. The house managers' recommendations are made to the main office.

MPTO Charges Distributor With Unfair and Unethical Practices Which Are Vehemently Denied by Al Lichtman, Who Says Allegations Are "Ridiculous and Ill-Tempered"

The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of eastern Pennsylvania, southern New Jersey and Delaware, with headquarters at Philadelphia, on Monday fired the opening gun against United Artists Corporation in a fight alleging unethical and unfair trade practices. Late last week, an appeal was made by the exhibitor body to the Federal Trade Commission at Washington, and on Monday of this week the association addressed an "open letter" to United, in which numerous complaints were set forth and a request made to disband the corporation.

Al Lichtman, vice-president in charge of sales for U. A., on Tuesday answered the "open letter," denying the exhibitors' charges and telling the group that their action was not only "ridiculous," but "ill-tempered" as well.

Upon receipt of the Lichtman answer, George Aarons, representing the MPTO group, was delegated to make a second appearance on Wednesday before the Federal Trade Commission at Washington, the purpose of which it is understood, is to lay before the government agency additional material concerning United Artists' distributing activities.

Lichtman's denial of the charges and the results of discussions with the Federal Bureau will be made the basis of a second "open letter" to United Artists on Thursday, according to Dave Barrist, chairman of the board of managers of the MPTO, which authored the original complaint at a special meeting held at Philadelphia last Friday.

Rumors in New York stated that the initial communication, which bore no signature other than the unit's corporate title, did not represent the voice of the association at all, but was engineered by a few exhibitor members who were working out a peeve against the distributor. Barrist vehemently denied this in a telephone conversation, stating that 17 or 18 members of the board of managers, which has a total membership of 20 and governs the association, voted unanimously at the Friday meeting to issue the open letter.

Al Lichtman said subsequently that his answer to the "open letter" was "ill-advised," declaring that the charges are not worth dignifying with an answer.

An inquiry on Wednesday about the contents of the second "open letter" to be filed by the MPTO drew the statement by Barrist that it had not been completed by the board, which was awaiting Aarons' return from Washington. Barrist did say that "it will contain definite facts and figures, and will be very illuminating."

The "open letter" addressed to United Artists on Monday, and Lichtman's answer, follow:

Exhibitors' Letter To United Artists

United Artists Corporation,
New York and Hollywood.

Gentlemen:

Once again you have shown your complete indifference to, and cold contempt for, the business ethics and fair trade practices dominating the relations between exhibitor and distributor.

Our specific complaint this time is that your company accepted a number of contracts and dates given you in good faith by exhibitors and that, instead of approving or rejecting these contracts, you held them while you negotiated new deals with competitive theatres. At this writing there are exhibitors whose contracts you have held for four weeks or more without approval or rejection notice.

This action on your part is a practice strongly condemned by the entire industry. Its prohibition is incorporated in every film contract but your own and is a part of the code of selling ethics promulgated a couple of years ago by the Will Hays office.

More particularly, however, it is a violation of Rule Nine (Distributor's Resolution No. 11) adopted at the Better Trade Practice Conference sponsored by the Federal Trade Commission in New York, October 10th to 16th, 1927, which is binding on the industry as a whole. We have accordingly filed a formal complaint with the Federal Trade Commission with a demand that this practice be investigated by the Department of Justice.

Your course of conduct in this respect is in

Lichtman's Answer To Exhibitors

If the ridiculous and ill-tempered statement issued by some of the moving spirits of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jerse yand Delaware, Inc., is an example of the harmonious and ethical basis on which those gentlemen would conduct the affairs of an industry then we are content to rest our case.

The contents of the open letter issued by this organization is hardly worth the attention of intelligent exhibitors. But lest a small minority mistake our silence for indifference we wish to go on record emphatically in denying the charges listed.

As a matter of fact, I have been authoritatively apprised that since the writing of the open letter a number of exhibitors who attended the meeting have openly expressed their total lack of sympathy with the action taken.

To the first charge,—that we have raided Hollywood studios for high-priced stars,—all I can say is that United Artists Corporation is a distributing organization, and therefore has no contact with studios. We are merely agents of a number of producers, and at no time have we come into contact with any studio other than those of the producers we represent.

This also answers charge No. 2, to the effect that we have caused unrest in Hollywood studios.

As to No. 3,—that there is no economic justification for the maintenance of our distribution system,—it may enlighten these gentlemen to learn that, although we market a compara-

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

THE contract department of a national distributor in New York received a communication the other day from one of its salesmen in the West, indicating that he had been successful—at last—in selling a "tough" exhibitor. The salesman sought an okay of the contract in the letter, which follows:

". . . . theatre offers six dozen eggs and 23 pounds of potatoes for each of our pictures.

"I am holding out for a slab of bacon to go with the eggs. . . .

"Please advise if okay, because if we hold out too long the eggs may go bad."

On certain days of the week, the theatre advertises an admission scale as follows:

1 Adult ticket—18 lbs. potatoes.

1 Adult ticket—10 eggs.

2, 3, 4 Adult tickets for one chicken (according to size).

Children may bring a pumpkin, squash, tomatoes or potatoes.

A film magnate passed through Kansas City on the Chief one recent morning. A group from the local exchange met him at the station.

"And how are our comedies selling?" the picture president asked a booker.

"Lousy," was the reply.

"That's strange," said the prexy, "my son-in-law makes them; they should be good!"

Instead of being fired, as the booker expected, the boss complimented him for not being a yes-man. "A yes-man last year almost ruined me and the firm," the boss admitted.

Fox Film honored its star, Janet Gaynor, at luncheon in New York the other day. It was an important affair for the heroine of many important Fox pictures, for in addition to being a total stranger to most of the press, she met for the first time W. C. Michel, vice-president and treasurer of the various Fox corporations, who has been for quite some time an important executive in the operating affairs of those companies.

Michel, however, admitted disappointment upon being introduced to Miss Gaynor. He had expected to see "a big star"—one at least a foot taller than the very petite Janet.

All outdoor advertising and "sniping" will be discontinued during December by Paramount Publix theatres in Greater New York territory, as a means of lowering costs during the holiday "slump" period.

THE "holiday" period between Thanksgiving and New Year's always is worrisome to circuits, who regularly suffer at this time from a seasonal slump. This year the situation appears to be a little worse, so much so that one national organization called in an association of mercantile "business counsellors" in an attempt to alleviate the threatening "red" grosses.

The "counsellors" were informed of conditions and were asked to submit a plan by which the slump period could be turned into one of profit-taking.

Accordingly, the "counsellors" set to work and after much burning of the midnight oil submitted what appeared to be a sure-fire scheme. Even officials of the circuit admitted that "it looks good."

Conferences were held and many arguments between the circuit officials were heard, pro and con, but the idea suddenly was abandoned—because, as one executive admitted, "these are no times to be trying to establish precedent!"

Tickets were purchased, accommodations and a beach chair were arranged for, and baggage had been sent aboard along with the necessary supply of bromo, headache potions, etc., etc., but then Hal made a fatal mistake: he stepped into the home office on his way to the pier to make sure that everything was running smoothly in his department.

Boss Al Lichtman happened along at this point and asked "Where ya goin', Hal?"

"Just takin' a li'l trip to Bermuda—need a rest," retorted Horne innocently.

"Okay, pal," said Al, "but before you leave, we want you to sit in on a confab for a new ad campaign; it'll take but an hour."

Hal did not get to Bermuda, but United got its ad campaign.

Marjorie Whittington had worked one year to break into pictures, unsuccessfully, until last week when Paramount signed her to a long term contract. Prior to her departure for Hollywood on Friday, the gang along Broadway gathered with Marge at the Park Central to wish her bon voyage. Marge was driving her car over Queensborough Bridge when something went wrong and the crash sent her to a nearby hospital, with injuries which resulted in the loss of one eye. She never will be able to face a camera.

A short career—even on Broadway.

Upon its return the other day from the Helen Twelvetrees luncheon aboard the good ship Pennsylvania, the staff was paid off and accompanying each paycheck was a li'l old "pink slip," indicating disbandment of the department in line with physical merging of all RKO properties. On the day it all happened, the art department, evidently peeved at the sudden dismissal, turned their working quarters into a shambles. Zukor Denies Talk Of New Financing

John Hertz, recently elected head of the finance committee, and Adolph Zukor, Paramount president, emphatically denied Wall Street rumors which stated on Tuesday that the company is contemplating new financing.

The wild yarns which flooded "the street" sent the corporation's stock to a new low, 7¾, on Tuesday, although later in the day it gained two points when Hertz and Zukor issued an official denial, the outgrowth of a lengthy long-distance telephone conversation between Hertz in New York and Zukor at the company's studios at Hollywood.

The two executives stated that the official explanation of the company's current financial structure was issued "in reply to inquiries from stockholders," which are understood to have deluged the home office throughout Tuesday. The statement follows:

"The total liability which this company has remaining for the repurchase of its stock amounts to $6,500,000; $2,500,000 becomes due on January 2, 1932, and is for the repurchase of stock issued for Great States Theatres, Inc., operating theatres throughout Illinois. The remaining $4,000,000 is for the balance of a total payment of $5,500,000 paid for a half interest in Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc. The above assets are not only fine earning properties, but are highly liquid and have an immediate market at a wholly satisfactory cash price. During the next several months a substantial amount of the foregoing obligations will be taken care of by the excess of current receipts over current disbursements.

"Present bank loans of the company amount to $8,200,000 and our bank balances at the present time are in excess of $5,500,000. The company has more than adequate confirmed bank credits to take care of all its current obligations. Earnings of the company for the first three quarters of this year are approximately $7,250,000, and our business is running profitably in the fourth quarter.

"The company has made no changes in its well-known conservative accounting policies which have, within recent months, been highly commended by both Price, Waterhouse & Co. and Haskins & Sells, certified public accountants.

"In our opinion no new financing for the company is necessary, nor is any contemplated."

Union Indictments In Chicago Dropped

Assistant State's Attorney Charles Lounsbury, who conducted the investigation of the Chicago Operators' union which led to the criminal indictment last July of Tom Maloy, union business agent, and other Chicago union officials, was severely censured by Criminal Court Judge John Prystalski when he was forced to admit Lounsbury's motion to strike out the indictments of the union officials on Wednesday.

Terming Lounsbury's motion as "highly improper," Judge Prystalski said he was powerless to deny it, and the indictments were stricken from the docket with leave to reinstate.

The defendants had demanded an immediate trial and moved for a nolle prosse of the case which would prevent its being reinstated. Lounsbury told the court that due to the absence of a key witness the state could not proceed. He said, further, that he had been advised that the conditions involved in the indictments had been settled amicably and that prosecution might bring a renewal of troubles within the industry.

"This is a novel situation," Judge Prystalski said. "Because two disputants have gotten together the state proposes to strike a criminal indictment. I think it is highly improper."

It is understood that an unofficial condition of the Chicago labor settlement was the striking of the indictments against Maloy, Tom Reynolds, Ralph O'Hara, Emmett Quinn and Jack Miller.

50 Million 1929 Net of 101 Firms

Income returns for 1929 were filed by 291 film producing corporations and by 2,407 film theatre corporations, according to statistics of the Bureau of Internal Revenue. Such figures are generally issued two years after the year involved.

The report indicates that of the producing companies, 142 reported no net income, having gross income aggregating $63,141,914 and deficits to the amount of $5,838,320, while 48 companies were inactive and filed no data. Among the theatre corporations, 1,046 had no net income, reporting gross income of $129,775,578 and deficits of $18,650,294, while 68 companies were inactive.

The 101 producing corporations showing taxable returns had a gross income of $280,302,870 and net income of $50,237,852; net loss for prior year aggregated $2,202,126, leaving income taxes payable of $5,330,474. The 1,293 theatre corporations showed gross income of $378,663,353, net income of $41,043,920, and loss for prior year of $1,971,770, the income taxes payable aggregating $4,104,616.

Each Company will Make Its Own Changes

No Concerted Action Decided Upon At Meetings of Executives At Production Center

By LEO MEEHAN

Hollywood studios will effect a substantial curtailment in the number of pictures produced, with a coincident concentration on improvement in quality, as a result of the Coast conferences of executives representing practically all major producers. Fewer but better pictures will be the aim of producing companies, if the plans developed are carried through as indicated, according to Leo Meehan, publisher, in The Hollywood Herald on Thursday.

"Despite wild rumors and loose talk, conferences of industry heads here with Will H. Hays for the past two weeks have not brought out a definite program nor will there be one. Executives merely had a series of meetings to discuss problems incident to general readjustments necessary in this as well as all other industries. No concerted action was determined and each organization will continue to run its own business and make its own plans. The important conclusion of all the companies is that there is no substitute for quality pictures, which cannot be ground out in large numbers.

"There will be a substantial curtailment in the number of pictures to be produced with concentration on improvement in quality. This will necessitate closing of many theatres because there will be insufficient product to keep all of them running. Salaries of stars and executives and all others will be readjusted to meet new conditions with a premium to those who show box-office results and the gate for those who cannot.

"High salaried persons will have to face the economic situation and accept appropriate remuneration not because of any concerted agreement or boycott but because producers no longer have the money to pay more than reasonable wages for results produced at the box-office. Hollywood is determined to make fewer pictures but to make them well and at costs in line with the public's present standard of dollar values."

Will H. Hays and his assistant, Joseph Breen, left Hollywood for New York on Wednesday night.

Following the conferences of executives Warners and First National launched the new economy program with salary reductions ranging from 20 to 30 per cent.

CHARGE AND ANSWER

Exhibitors' Letter

line with the policies and practices pursued by your company over the past ten years, which have worked incalculable damage to the industry and the relations between distributor and exhibitor. As a result of these policies and practices, you, as a distributing company, stand convicted before the bar of exhibitor opinion of being a distinct liability to the industry of which you are a part. Repeated attempts to induce you to alter these policies to conform to those of the rest of the industry having proved fruitless, we call upon you, for the good of the industry, voluntarily to retire as a distributing organization and to relieve the trade of the burden of your continued existence. We base our demand on the following indictment of your methods over the past number of years:

1. You, more than any other film company, are responsible for the prevailing high film rentals. Your policy, in the past, of "raiding" the other studios for stars with offers of greater returns brought about the staggering salaries now ruining the industry.
2. Just as you spread unrest in the studios of Hollywood so you have sown the seeds of discord in the distributing branch of the industry by your refusal to adjust oversold spots and your complete indifference to the legitimate complaints of the theatremen.
3. There is no economic justification for maintaining a national distributing system for the marketing of a dozen pictures. The distribution cost per picture thereby becomes an added burden which the exhibitor must pay in higher flat rentals or increased percentages.
4. Your pretensions to artistic superiority upon which all your "high hat" policies are based have been proved time and again to be a delusion and a sham. Your reputation, we feel, is just a hangover from the early days.
5. The heritage of hatred which your treatment of the exhibitors has won for you is a constant source of irritation within the industry retarding the attempts to promote harmony and goodwill between exhibitor and distributor.

Our complaint is against United Artists Corporation as a distributing body and not against the individual producing units the members of which we believe have no knowledge of many of the conditions existing in your sales offices. We feel that the welfare of the industry as a whole as well of these individuals units will best be served by disbanding the United Artists Corporation.

Yours truly,
MOTION PICTURE THEATRE OWNERS of Eastern Penn., Southern New Jersey and Delaware, Inc.

Lichtman's Answer

tively small number of pictures, United Artists is operating at a lower percentage cost than any other distributor in the world.

With no exhibitor has the cost of distribution ever entered into a trade. Every exhibitor knows that the only basis of film rentals is the quality and drawing power of a picture, and if any one company has been a champion of this system it is United Artists, for we have repeated over and over again that we do business upon the "Look Before You Book" policy.

Furthermore, we have openly held ever since we have been established in business that we want every penny that the traffic can bear for our pictures, not one penny more and not one penny less. The only quarrel one can have with that policy is that, values being as intangible as they are, it has been difficult to find an exact figure, either upon a percentage basis or on an outright sale.

Charge No. 4, we deny absolutely,—that our artistic superiority is a pretense. We maintain that it is an actuality. We have delivered, in proportion to the number of pictures released in twelve years, a greater number of box-office and artistic successes than could have been selected from a like number of pictures obtainable elsewhere.

Yes, we are proud of our past record, and we deny that it is a delusion and a sham. Who would not be proud of such pictures as "The Gold Rush," "The Mark of Zorro," "Robin Hood," "Stella Dallas," "Sorrell and Son," "Son of the Sheik," "Way Down East," "The Thief of Bagdad," "The Three Musketeers," "My Best Girl," and "Little Annie Rooney."

We are equally proud that our producers have mastered the new art of the talking picture. We would like the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey and Delaware, Inc., to deny their appreciation of such pictures as "Coquette," "Alibi," "City Lights," "Hell's Angels," "Bulldog Drummond," "The Front Page," "Palmy Days," "Street Scene," "Whoopee" and "Abraham Lincoln."

We deny, as is charged in Paragraph No. 5, that there is any hatred between exhibitors of the country and United Artists. We admit, of course, that there is a very active difference of opinion as to values, due to the lack of a standardized system of computing values of pictures. This system will obtain until someone smart enough finds one to regulate film rentals that will work as automatically as a slot machine.

I am afraid that the gentlemen responsible for the statement issued by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey and Delaware, Inc., will find it difficult to separate their complaint against United Artists as against the producers, because the producers releasing through United Artists Corporation own the corporation, and the sales policy and every other phase of its business has been set by them . Actually owning the business, they perhaps are best qualified to judge whether they should disband their business at the request of a few disgruntled gentlemen.

And were we so bold as they in making suggestions, we would request the disbanding of the political organization which caused this open letter, an organization which can be of no value whatever if it continues to devote its time to such empty vaporings.

We will continue to serve such exhibitors as care to buy our product under the very fair policy which has efficiently served the interests of the industry for twelve years.

country—in the most remote island in the world!

"United Artists!" "Paramount!" "Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer!" "Warner Brothers!" "First National!" "Fox!" "Universal!" "RKO!" "Columbia!"

What other industry could have its leading concerns mentioned so quickly?

Ask that same person to name the most famous persons they know!

"Chaplin!" "Fairbanks!" "Pickford!" "Garbo!" "Swanson!" "Colman!" "Cantor!" "Gable!" "Chevalier!" and so on!

What kings, princes, statesmen or heroes would be mentioned more glibly?

Ask that same person what his favorite diversion is.

"The Movies!" will be the inevitable answer!

Ask him, if you will, what pictures are playing in town! Ten to one he'll reel them off without hesitation!

Then "pan" around to the industry itself and gaze upon figures like these:

Total capital invested in the business: $2,500,000,000.00! Of which 80 per cent is invested in this country.

Gross annual admissions in the United States alone, $1,560,000,000.00!

Annual advertising expenditure, $100,000,000.00!

Number of advertisements placed DAILY in various media, 15,000!

Approximate attendance in United States per week, 90,000,000 to 115,000,000.

So somebody must be reading the ads.

BUT—Mr. Collins HAS given us food for thought! And the thought is this: What fools we theatre advertising mortals be!

First, we listened to the "criticisms" of the general advertising fraternity and fell for those criticisms. And as we slipped we saw them steal up and grab our thunder, our "showmanship in advertising" and appropriate it for themselves.

The big smash ads of today—those of the national advertisers, yes—and department stores, too—are the ads our showmen used successfully years ago!

Then we listened to the cry of more "dignity" in theatre advertising and, saps that we were, took the spontaneity, the warmth, the gaiety, out of our advertising and dignified ourselves into a stiffness that finally crackled and woke us up and made us get back to where we were!

Our ballyhoos, our "lights," our "stunts"—all these things they shouted against—where are they? I'll tell you where! In the very stores that decried them!

But ho-hum! It's getting late. And I DO want to see "THE CHAMP!" The ad on that picture got me.

And on the way down I think I'll drop into Macy's for one of those salt-shakers. Yes, Mr. Collins' ad made me want that, too!

Distributors Side with Renting Society

See Beaverbrook in Background of Cooperative Move—Gesture from U. S. Held Imperative

By WM. H. MOORING, London

The Kinematograph Renters' Society, having resolved to stand by its established practice not to do business with any booking combines of exhibitors, a state of "war" exists between the principal distributors and the founders of the Film Industries Cooperative Society into which large numbers of independent British theatre owners are being enrolled.

The KRS has been assured of the full support of the Gaumont-British distributing organizations, which are not members of the KRS, and John Maxwell of the Wardour and Pathe renting concerns gives his support through membership of the KRS. It therefore will be seen that, although in the first place the cooperative scheme was launched in an atmosphere of pro-British—or even anti-American—endeavor, it now assumes a change of character, and becomes a fight of combine against combine, rather than foreign combine against British cooperative.

Political Power Dampened

There is no underrating the fact that this change does affect the chances of success with which the cooperative must fight. For not only will it be difficult to function until the KRS solidarity is broken—a turn which might conceivably follow the enrollment of say 500 to 1,000 independents, but the cooperative's political power is definitely dampened. Parliamentary feeling is very keen on the question of foreign domination, but clearly, although the bulk of KRS opinion is representative of American interests, the British distributors are in this instance with the KRS 100 per cent.

Independent exhibitors naturally are divided in their opinions of the value of the cooperative as a weapon in their defense against the combine. Most agree that in principle it is sound, but that mass booking loses them the individuality as a booking unit which is a factor to their success.

Serious Adjustment Needed

In any case, there must be some serious adjustment of policy, in which both sides might profitably take part.

Officers of the cooperative are: President, Will Evans, late of Gaumont-British and now of Moss Empires; Sir E. Gordon Craig, of New Era Pictures; Major A. J. Gale, London exhibitor; G. F. MacDonald, exhibitor; A. T. Bennett, financial expert and director of Film Industries, and R. C. Morrison, expert of cooperative society movement ex-M. P. and past secretary to Ramsay MacDonald, prime minister.

New York Engineers To Hear New Device

Members of the New York Section of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, meeting Wednesday night, December 9, will hear an address by Leopold Stokowski, conductor of the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra, in connection with the first public demonstration of the new system of recording and reproducing music and voice, reported at the Swampscott fall meeting.

The new system, perfected by the Bell Telephone Laboratories as an elaboration of the vertical cut recording used by Thomas A. Edison in his first phonograph, is designed to make possible the reproduction of music played by the largest orchestras with a naturalness never before achieved. H. A. Frederick of the Bell Laboratories will demonstrate the system, and music specially recorded will be reproduced using amplifiers larger than used in the largest motion picture theatres.

Jesse L. Clark, city manager of Sparks houses in Tampa, Fla., has been promoted to district manager of the Florida west coast houses. Headquarters will be in Tampa.

Warner Trial Is Set for January

The action brought against Warner Brothers by the United States Department of Justice, on the basis of the Clayton Anti-Trust Act and growing out of the acquisition of First National, will be heard in federal court some time in January, it is understood.

The case, scheduled for this week, has been postponed by request of Warners. John H. Amen, special assistant attorney general in charge of prosecution of film cases, will return next week to New York from an inspection tour.

Tinker Understood Planning No Changes in Fox Personnel

It is generally anticipated that E. R. Tinker, new Fox president, will make no changes in Fox executive personnel, seeking to adopt present people to possible new operation methods, rather than to attempt to substitute for them people unfamiliar with the organization.

Up to now, Tinker has made no changes in the operating personnel of Fox, it is understood.

FOX LICENSED TO USE VIOLET RAY RECORDING

P. A. Powers Controls Meyer Tube, Inc., Holder of Patent Rights on New Sound System

Licensing of Fox Film to record sound by means of a new ultra violet ray system, developed by E. M. Meyer, was announced this week by P. A. Powers, who controls Meyer Tube, Inc., holders of the patent rights on the new system.

The Meyer ultra violet light source is said to be adaptable to recording sound on 16mm. film, as well as standard width, and it is believed that Fox may apply the new system to its 16mm. production activities. Also said to be adaptable to television recording, Continental Television Company is reported to have applied for licensing which probably will be granted this week.

The Meyer recording system utilizes rays emitted by a special ultra-violet tube which, unlike the ordinary recording tube, is operated entirely by induction and is said to contain no elements. The inventor claims that the frequency of the tube, also, is practically unlimited and that, due to the low temperature at which it operates, it has an exceptionally long life.

When used in conjunction with a light filter while recording sound on film, the visible rays are said to be filtered out, leaving only the ultra-violet rays to expose the film, which, it is claimed, results in a sound track of the highest quality and a finer definition than is attainable with the present recording systems using visible light. These claims comprise the principal improvements cited by the inventor for his method over visible light systems.

Erpi and RCA engineers for whom the Meyer system was demonstrated this week are said to have pronounced it "practicable."

Reciprocity Urged In British Crisis

any plan such as now excites the whole industry.

Can the KRS refuse to do business on any account, with a combine of exhibitors which starts off with a strength close upon 200, and is almost certain to get a 500 membership within a month? I can say definitely that within 48 hours of the disclosure of the society's plans, at least two members of the KRS—Paramount and MGM—had reached a decision that it could not, or at least that it should not.

In the past year, it is disclosed by Comyn Carr, KC, that no fewer than 200 small theatre owners have "gone under."

There is no doubting the force behind the moves in the background. One sees the shadow of the powerful Empire Crusader Beaverbrook and from his seat in the House of Lords he can make himself heard through the House of Commons. The tone of Comyn Carr's statement, introducing the new society, is in itself evidence of the fact that determination is this time based upon unassailable support of the kind which will make any precipitate decision on the part of the renters a definitely dangerous thing.

The fight is for profit, but I would not say for profit first. It is for principle, and I would not say for principle second. America should send over at once some one who knows how to heal sores and not irritate them: some big man representative of the USA industry, because, mishandled, the situation may develop from an ugly one into a hopeless one.

It may be true that England cannot do without the product of America, but if it is equally true that America is out to get the maximum business in motion pictures in this market, the present wave of national sentiment had better be pandered to than scoffed at.

As I said weeks ago in Motion Picture Herald, hostility, where concord would make for better business, is inevitable unless there can be more reciprocity—more real understanding. Britain does not want the earth, but she wants the bit she already has—applying this to motion pictures.

Fear Open "Warfare"

Cannot some gesture of reciprocity come from USA at this late hour? Britain is now paying £10,000,000 for American films where a few years ago she paid only £2,000,000. The American interests in British theatres have been doubled many times over in the last two years.

The situation revealed by the Canadian Commission, coupled with the foregoing and similar facts, plus the uglier one that few of even the best British films are getting American release, has produced a panic in political circles, and something will have to be done or open warfare between the film world of the United States and that of Britain will result in chaos.

Methods of Operation

Members of the cooperative will probably be arranged into two complete circuits, and subdivided into first, second and third-run members. The runs over the two circuits would be arranged so that members classified as second-runs would be first-runs in the second circuit.

The society would book in bulk, and take 1 per cent of each member's gross receipts. Profits would be divided among the members, after deducting expenditure, according to the amount of business they had done with the society. The society would presumably be free of income tax, like all British cooperative societies, though the present Government may alter that very soon. Shares are divided into units of £10 each and will carry 7 per cent interest. No member is to show films other than those booked through the society unless with the written consent of the society.

Officers will be elected each year by the members.

Robert Ames and Lya de Putti Die Only a Day Apart

Robert Ames, film actor, most familiarly seen in juvenile roles, though 42 years of age, and Lya de Putti, 32, Hungarian actress who achieved fame on the screen for her work with Emil Jannings, died one day apart in New York last week.

Ames was found dead on Friday of natural causes in his suite at the Hotel Delmonico, and Miss de Putti died at the Harbor Sanitarium after pneumonia set in following an operation for the removal of a small chicken bone which had become lodged in her throat.

Ames was buried on Tuesday at Hartford, married four times and was reported engaged to marry Ina Claire. He went to the screen from the legitimate stage, appearing with Gloria Swanson in "The Trespasser," and in "Behind Office Doors," "Holiday," "Madonna of the Streets," "Rebound" and last in "Rich Man's Folly" for Paramount.

Services were held for Miss de Putti on Monday at St. Patrick's Cathedral, after which the body was sent to her mother, Countess Maria Hoyos, of Budapest for burial there.

Bicentennial Unit's Members Deny That Griffith Will Direct

The following was released this week by the publicity department of United Artists at the home office:

"Four days after Arnold Kruckman, director of the District of Columbia George Washington Bicentennial Commission, announced that D. W. Griffith would direct the four-day pageant next June in the national capital, members of the Commission denied that any such arrangement had been effected.

"The original story had been sent out by George Gerhard of United Artists for Mr. Griffith following conferences with Mr. Kruckman of the commission. And in the denial Mr. Gerhard's name was mentioned. But copies of the entire correspondence between Mr. Griffith and the commission are in the files of United Artists, this correspondence including a letter from Mr. Kruckman in which Mr. Griffith accepted the invitation of the Commission to lend his aid. Throughout that correspondence the Commission took the initiative in soliciting Mr. Griffith's services, which, by the way, were to be given at a great personal loss to him.

"The nub of the denial doubtless is contained in the last sentence of a message received by Motion Picture Daily, which says:

"'Today's controversy in the George Washington Bicentennial Commission is one of a number in which the officials have engaged.'

"In other words, Griffith and Gerhard apparently are placed on a spot because of internecine warfare within the Commission."

Rogers Will Not Desert Films

Charles "Buddy" Rogers will continue to make two or three pictures a year, in addition to playing in Ziegfeld's "Follies" and radio broadcasting. He is now at work in Paramount's "Second Chances."

Columbia Branches Now in Six Groups

Columbia's exchanges have been rearranged in six groups, effective at once, to expedite distribution.

George C. Naylor, formerly Middle States division manager, will assume supervision of the Western district, comprising Los Angeles, San Francisco, Denver, Portland, Salt Lake City and Seattle. He will make his headquarters in Los Angeles.

Harry Taylor, now in charge of Dallas, Oklahoma City and Kansas City, will also handle Omaha, Des Moines and St. Louis as manager of the Middle States district, with headquarters in Kansas City.

Phil Dunas, Midwest division manager, with offices in Chicago, takes over supervision of Indianapolis in addition to Detroit, Chicago, Milwaukee and Minneapolis.

Morris Safier, Eastern district manager, will handle Pittsburgh, Cleveland and Cincinnati.

Joe McConville and Abe Montague, New England division managers, continue to supervise Albany, Buffalo, Boston and New Haven.

Sam Moscow, Southern district manager, is in charge of Atlanta, Charlotte, Memphis, New Orleans and Washington.

Foreign Film Should Be Foreign: Brecher

An important market exists in this country for the foreign production, declares Leo Brecher of the Protex Trading Corporation, so long as the product is selected according to American tastes, rather than merely because they may promise success abroad. The foreign picture, he states, should be truly representative of life and manners on the other side, rather than foreign replicas of Hollywood product.

Theatres now booking Protex product are located in some dozen different cities, among them Cleveland, Los Angeles, Cincinnati, San Francisco, Boston, Chicago, Milwaukee, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington. The first picture of the new season is a German production, "Opera Ball."

Fox To Distribute 40 Films Abroad During Current Year

Fox will distribute 40 feature films abroad during the current season, it is understood. Three originals have been finished, five have been remade from films with English dialogue and six have had dialogue shifted from the original English.

Certain other of the foreign versions are expected to have super-imposed or cut-in titles. Clayton P. Sheehan, foreign department executives, will supervise the distribution.

Capitol Returns To Air

The Capitol, New York, will return its weekly radio broadcast program to the air beginning December 6. The program will last one hour, at 11:30 A. M. over a nationwide NBC-WEAF network.

MGM Buys Four Stories

M-G-M has purchased four new story properties, including "The Wet Parade," "Eskimo," "The Red Son of Carlisle" and "Are You Listening?" All are tentatively set for production next season.

FROM HOLLYWOOD

By LEO MEEHAN

Ears are to the ground along the Fox West Coast Theatres front, where Harry Arthur has begun to use the broom vigorously since his arrival from New York. Although Harry seems as yet unprepared to make a complete statement of changes contemplated, it is rumored that he will eliminate the present divisional system, at least in southern California. House managers will be held responsible for their own operations and budgets, and will report direct to Arthur. E. Port Major will be his chief assistant in charge of policy matters, with Robert C. Frost, former division manager, as a field representative. A number of changes in house managers are expected.

Amid flying rumors of salary cutting, production curtailment, theatre closings, and daily air-tight conferences of the industry's leading executives at the Hollywood Hays office, Fox studios issued the real "thanksgiving" statement of the week here. It was said that eight productions would be put into work during the month of December, an unusually heavy program for the holiday month, and the announcement brought cheer to many.

Pictures which will go in at Fox include "Gay Bandit," with George O'Brien, Conchita Montenegro, Linda Watkins, Victor McLaglen and Weldon Heyburn, to be co-directed by Bert Sebell and J. M. Kerrigan; "Disorderly Conduct," with Spencer Tracy and Ralph Bellamy, directed by John Considine, Jr.; "Salomy Jane," featuring Warner Baxter, Joan Bennett and Alexander Kirkland, directed by Raoul Walsh; "Silent Witness," directed by Marcel Varnel and R. L. Hough; "First Cabin," with Thomas Meighan, directed by Hamilton MacFadden; "Lazybones," to be directed by Alfred Wurker, and "Young America."

Nicholas and Joseph M. Schenck and Earle W. Hammons joined the group of New York executives during the week, and are in on the conferences being held daily at the Producers' Association offices regarding "the state of the industry." MGM contract people smiled broadly when Schenck announced they would not be asked to take salary cuts, which already have been pretty general throughout the colony. With the arrival of these three, the heads of every company member of the Hays organization are here except Fox and Columbia.

Appendicitis has been ravaging the movies heavily lately, with Tom Mix near death, and two writers, Oliver H. P. Garrett and Fred Niblo, Jr., on the mend after operations. Hope was almost abandoned for Mix, but at this writing it looks as though his tremendous vitality will win the battle. He has been deluged with messages of sympathy from all over the country. Universal will probably postpone his first production until around February 1.

Theodore Wharton, noted old-time director, died last Friday night. Wharton will be remembered by many of those veteran exhibitors as the first director of serials, including those made years ago by Pearl White. This and the deaths in New York last week of Lya de Putti and Robert Ames brought sadness to Hollywood's picture folk.

Lila Lee, much restored in health, has returned from a convalescence trip to Tahiti and the South Seas. Expects to resume her picture career shortly.

Universal has renewed the contract of William Wyler for another year.

While in town conferring with his production chiefs, E. W. Hammons expects to see Tiffany's "Hotel Continental," and Mack Sennett's Moran & Mack comedy feature go before the cameras.

Mary Pickford is back from New York. She is studying several stories she brought with her, hoping to work out plans for a new production to be made very soon.

Theatreman Alexander Pantages seems to be out of the prison shadows after a long, bitter and costly fight. After debating 65 hours, a jury acquitted him of the charge of attacking Dancer Eunice Pringle, the second time the case was tried.

Most of the Pathe personnel and some equipment will be moved to the Radio lot early in December. Thereafter the Pathe lot in Culver City will be used only for overflow production and possibly for westerns and short subjects. Contract players such as Ann Harding, Constance Bennett, Helen Twelvetrees, Bill Boyd and Robert Armstrong will appear shortly under the Radio banner. The crowing of the venerable Pathe Rooster is getting pretty weak.

Helen Twelvetrees and Mary Astor have been assigned to the picture which John Barrymore will do for Radio about January 1. Story selected is an original by Louis Stevens, entitled "State's Attorney." Gene Fowler is assisting the author in preparing it for the screen, under supervision of Radio's new production prexy, David Selznick. Rowland Brown will direct.

The big matrimonial event of the week was the Constance Bennett-Marquis de la Falaise affair last Sunday in the home of Director George Fitzmaurice. Honeymooning postponed until later, as they are both busy in production activities at this time.

Joseph I. Breen, assistant to Will Hays, is here to sit in on the executive conferences with his chief and to familiarize himself with the activities of the Coast offices. Expects to be back in New York next week with Hays.

FOX FOR PROFIT

DEBUNKING OF TELEVISION SOUGHT BY THE BETTER BUSINESS BUREAU

Investors Are Warned To Use Caution

"Tipster" Methods Being Used to Arouse Public Imagination Are Denounced by Bureau

Get-rich-quick schemers have taken television as the avenue for their next pilgrimage into the pocketbooks of the public. Ever ready to perpetrate fraud in the name of science and its developments, these plotters already have commenced to lay the groundwork of dishonest stock promotion similar to the manipulations which were used extensively in the earlier days of radio and sound motion pictures.

Stock in television companies is being offered by a wide variety of selling methods. Public imagination is being aroused and the National Better Business Bureau, together with its affiliated bureaus and associations, is in receipt of hundreds of inquiries from persons who have been approached on purchase of television securities.

Join in Fighting Dishonesty

Methods of operation and the manipulations of many in the television field were placed under the penetrating spotlight of the National Bureau several weeks ago. Secret investigations have been underway and the aid of reputable interests in the co-related fields of radio-television-motion pictures was obtained to stamp out dishonest or highly questionable practices and definitely establish the stage of developments.

Results of these investigations were made known this week by the Bureau, which states that "some of the companies whose stock is offered are under the management of men who enjoy a reputation for integrity and who themselves undoubtedly believe in the practical value and future success of their companies. In some instances, however, stock in these companies is being sold by stock jobbers who charge considerably more for it than its price elsewhere and who are making claims for television or the company whose stock they are selling that might not be made by the company's officers themselves.

Some Follow "Tipster" Methods

"Some stock is being sold by methods which are typical of those used so successfully by 'tipsters' a few years ago in extracting millions of dollars from the pocketbooks of inexperienced investors," according to the Bureau.

"The National Better Business Bureau has consulted a number of experts and authorities in the radio and television industries in an effort to seek out reliable information.

Is Television Accomplished Fact?

"To estimate the approximate time when television will arrive requires an understanding of what is popularly understood as 'television.' If it is the transmitting by radio of pictures of people or objects in motion and capturing them by some equipment that will in turn reproduce them without great detail so they can be seen on a small screen or through a peephole, then it has been an accomplished fact for some years. If the popular conception of television is the broadcasting of elaborate outdoor events so that continuous images can be observed at distant points in satisfactory detail and large size simultaneously with the action, then, judging from the problems which science must surmount before this is accomplished, television is years away.

"Television satisfactory enough to hold public interest may lie somewhere between these two extremes. Its development must cope with two general problems. One is that of producing receiving sets which can be operated easily and which will reproduce images satisfactory in detail. The other is in producing and transmitting programs that have a continuous entertainment value.

"There is a belief on the part of many authorities that equipment which will find the greatest public favor will not involve rotary scanning discs, delicate hand controls, driving motors, or noisy moving parts. It is also their belief that receiving sets should present images brightly enough to be clearly seen at reasonable distances in a moderately lighted room.

"Laboratory studies in the television industry are sufficiently encouraging to prompt optimistic views regarding production some time in the near future of quiet, easily-operated receiving sets without scanning discs and synchronous motors that will perform with sufficient efficiency to hold continuous public interest. Just when such sets will be announced and what manufacturer will announce them first remains a question.

Broadcasting Television

"The reliable range of any television broadcasting station that now seems commercially practical is roughly one-fourth the service distance reached by sound broadcasting stations or about one-sixteenth the reliable service area covered. There is no known feasible way of sending television programs of the sort that are likely to hold public interest over existing telephone wires as is now done in national radio broadcasting through affiliated network stations.

"Together with this consideration is the enormously increased cost of programs which must involve television material, skilled direction, lighting, changes of scenery and costumes, as well as 'television personality.'

"In spite of these obstacles the leaders of the industry believe that acceptable television will be made practical, but it appears that whatever equipment is found suitable for the purpose must overcome the limitations of television as a novelty and give it the commercial possibilities which alone will make it lasting and practical," the Bureau's statement concludes.

Ralph Gervers has been named assistant director of exploitation for Columbia, under the supervision of Bert Ennis.

Technicolor Moves Activities From Boston to Coast Plant

Technicolor has moved all its activities from Boston to its Hollywood laboratories, according to Herbert T. Kalmus, president and general manager of Technicolor Corporation. Heretofore, most of the Technicolor prints have been manufactured in Boston.

The move is pointed out as resulting in economy of production time, and will permit production executives to cooperate more closely with Technicolor in inspecting prints. About 40 executives and technical men have already arrived on the Coast.

Circuits Increases Capital

Hughes Franklin Theatres Company, Ltd., Los Angeles, has increased its capital from 4,000 to 6,000 shares, no par value, at State House, Dover, Del.

THEATRE RECEIPTS

A continuance of the increase which marked the theatre receipts compilation last week is again in evidence with the report for the current week. The total this week, ending November 28, showed a total gross figure for 190 theatres in 30 cities of $2,384,543, an increase of $27,037 over the total for the previous week, ended November 21, which reached $2,357,506. Eight new low individual theatre figures were recorded this week as compared with five last week. However, one new high total appears in the present compilation, while none was noted for the last seven-day period. The Avalon theatre in Ottawa attained the new high figure for the week.

Everyone who sees it is a walking 24-sheet for

The newspaper ad (left) comes right out of the press sheet! It is only one of the many smash ads now being used in record smashing campaigns throughout the country.

THE MONSTER IS LOOSE!

A FRIENDLY WARNING
If you have a weak heart and cannot stand intense excitement or even shock, we advise you NOT to see this production. If, on the contrary, you like an unusual thrill, you will find it in "FRANKENSTEIN"

No man has ever seen its like . . . no woman's kiss has touched its lips . . .

A wild, weird, wonderful, fantastic picture of a man who made another "man" from the parts of other men long departed . . . a creature with the strength of a dozen men . . . who lives . . . breathes . . . walks . . . with a mechanical brain but without a soul . . . It looks like a man, but is it?

No thriller ever made can touch it!

PASSING IN REVIEW

The department endeavors to set forth two lines of material of service to the exhibitor—first a showman's evaluations of the oustanding pictures—second, reviews of information

"POSSESSED." Are you looking for a picture that will appeal to the small town? The working classes? The idle rich? The large city? Well, here you have it all rolled into one. And with no less a combination than Joan Crawford and Clark Gable. Plus "Skeets" Gallagher and Wallace Ford. Which ought to settle once and for all the question about some showmanship being used in the selection and treatment of stories on the M-G-M lot. This one will shatter many past records of these two stars, and rightly so, too. It is entertainment of the finest sort, acted in the finest manner and offered as most of our customers want it.

Miss Crawford certainly attains great heights in her performance and Gable gets a break with a part that will win him many more boosters.

There are so many selling angles to a picture like this that we hesitate to embark on any sort of selling plan. Each showman will certainly get the most out of it by capitalizing on the slants and stars, according to the particular community he caters to. A preview, often advocated in these reviews, will help materially, but even if you can't glimpse it before you start selling it, you need have no fears. Play it up as one of the season's best and they'll hardly question any statement to that effect.

The title will prove as strong at the box office as those of most Crawford pictures; throw in the added weight of a grand picture and Clark Gable and what have you! Standing Room Only, or I'll eat my last year's hat.

"Audience" strength is undisputed. They'll love it from start to finish and go out to tell their neighbors to be sure and get to your theatre while you're still playing it.

Best spotted away from the kids or Sunday showings, but otherwise the road is wide and clear for sweet riding to some nice money at the b. o.

"RICH MAN'S FOLLY" is a corking good picture, but they would have been smarter had they named it "Trumbull & Son," or some other title far more impressive for box office reasons than the one they tagged it.

Besides Bancroft, the star, you have only Francess Dee and Robert Ames. Miss Dee can be played up more than usual because she plays a fine part and will win a lot of public sympathy, and besides, you can recall her as the rich girl in "An American Tragedy." For future starring possibilities and what it may mean for the box office, I suggest you play her up a bit more than you might ordinarily. The recent death of Robert Ames in New York eliminates that name from special exploitation. The youngster who plays Trumbull's son is both natural and lovable, he handles a none-too-easy role to perfection and is deserving of some good breaks in the future. Whether it means anything to play him up for the benefit of the kids, is up to you. The others of the cast are competent, but not important for the receipts.

As already mentioned, the title is not "box office" unless you can take hold and build a campaign around it that ties it definitely to the story and the picture. Otherwise, it will be "just another title," no more and no less. Its possibilities lie in the manner you sell the picture and should tend to create the impression that here was a man who was so rich and powerful that he wanted, and usually got, everything he wanted. How or why or who was hurt in his attaining his wishes is the strong vein of the picture and should be your strong vein as well.

Picture is fine for "audience" strength and will hold the patron's interest right through. Trust them to help you sell the picture after they've seen it. So here again you have a fine piece of merchandise with somewhat of a handicap in the form of a title that doesn't particularly help it. So you must make up the deficiency and get those customers of yours so worked up that they won't want to miss seeing one of the nicest evening's entertainments to come out of the Paramount picture factory.

OK for either the kids or a Sunday showing.

"MEN IN HER LIFE" is picture number two that is OK but saddled with a poor title. This one in particular was deserving of a darned sight better name than the one Columbia gave it.

A thoroughly enjoyable story, a trifle slow at the start, but soon gaining in tempo until it carries right on to the end. One that will please the audiences of Times Square and Main Street without question, and one that will send them home very much satisfied with their investment in a ticket to your theatre.

For names you have but Lois Moran (once my favorite of favorites) and Charles Bickford. They give a grand performance and can match anything that's come down the pike for real, sincere acting. Others in the cast won't mean anything as far as box office influence is concerned.

In selling this picture you must absolutely sell away from the title. The title suggests things that just don't fit in with the story and leaves the wrong impression that here is a girl who has had innumerable affairs with men, while on the contrary, she has been involved with but one and you'll overlook that. Bickford's characterization of the retired millionaire bootlegger will win them from the moment he opens his mouth and calls his foreign chauffeur "mugg."

In audience value you have nothing to worry about. Anything you promise them will fall short of what you deliver. The picture is marvelously entertaining and even the most critical will find little to complain about. So try to get a look at this one before you frame your advertising and see where you can best sell it without playing up that title.

It doesn't mean a thing for the youngsters, but is OK for anywhere else in your lineup. Play it up strong along those lines that you believe most salable for your community and then see if it doesn't bring home the bacon.

"SURRENDER" probably looked grand in script form, but whatever they expected of it hardly materialized.

Another kick-back to the war, this one takes you to a German prison camp and centers around a group of Frenchmen who are anxious to escape. Fox comes along with this one only a short time after "Heartbreak," so there must be a weakness in Movietone City for keeping that doggoned fracas alive as long as possible.

Warner Baxter and Leila Hyams are the stars and handle their roles quite satisfactorily, but they cannot make a slow picture fast or interesting. In addition, you have C. Aubrey Smith (if that means anything in your town) and some fine acting by Ralph Bellamy.

Its only selling angles are, naturally, the Frenchman falling in love with the German girl, and with the prison camp idea as the background you must build it up best to suit your local requirements.

The title holds little value at the box office; whatever you make of it depends on the impressive way you sell it, but if you oversell it may prove poor judgment. It would be best to keep within the confines of good showmanship and let them know that while it is not the greatest picture in the world, it is far from the worst. Surrounded by an exceptionally strong program of good shorts, it ought to get by without hurting your usual grosses.

Questionable for kids, but OK for any other spot you book it for. The youngsters may get a certain amount of excitement out of the prison camp slant, but that's about all that would interest them.

"Audience" value is not so good.

"SUICIDE FLEET" contains plenty of thrills, some hearty laughs and enough story to hold the patrons' interest right through. Therefore, being what it is, and having the United States Navy to help it along, it ought to be a money maker for 'most any spot, especially the smaller towns and cities where they love to get excited about the Navy coming to the rescue of the sailors floating on the ocean.

The title packs a grand wallop for the box office and should create enough interest in itself to help put it over as far as receipts are concerned. Back that title up with a real "smash" campaign and you'll have a right smart chance of standing them up for a couple of nights of your run. Names are useful, too, depending on how popular those names are in your own particular community. William Boyd, James Gleason, Robert Armstrong and Ginger Rogers are the quartet whose names can be used for selling purposes.

The kids will eat up the naval scenes and yell for more.

In "audience" value, it is OK. The story will hold their interest and altogether they will spend a most enjoyable time at your house.

It stands to reason that your best selling slants lie in the Navy angle. That angle will work swell for your entire campaign, especially the newspaper ads and outside exploitation. Battleship fronts will also help it along on transient streets, and ballyhoos likewise will do their share.

So, taking all in all, you have a valuable piece of film in "Suicide Fleet," so go out and sell it with a definite view of doing business far above normal.—CHARLES E. LEWIS.

Rich Man's Folly

(Paramount)

Drama

A strong man, mentally and physically, obsessed with a deep belief that his ships are the best ships and that Trumbull and Son stands for the greatest in shipbuilding, is George Bancroft in this dramatic story of an individual with but one idea, whose world collapses about his ears, and who finally see the light.

An S. R. O. crowd at the New York Paramount gave every evidence of being closely gripped by the film from the opening sequence to the final fadeout. Praise was lavish for Bancroft in his portrayal of Trumbull, for Frances Dee as the daughter who is neglected from childhood by an obsessed father, for the late Robert Ames as the young rival shipbuilder who falls in love with Miss Dee, and for Young David Durand as the son for whom Bancroft held high hopes.

Bancroft's only thought in life is to have a son to carry on the Trumbull and Son fame and fortune in the making of great ships. His wife, Dorothy Peterson, dies in childbirth and Bancroft lavishes all attention upon the child, to the neglect of Miss Dee. Much favorable comment, incidentally, greeted the work of Dawn O'Day, for her appealing and convincing portrayal of the daughter as a child.

David christens a new ship at the direction of his father, but, being a delicate child, the driving rain in which he was forced to stand, proves too much for him, and he dies, leaving the father completely desolated. The daughter meanwhile, neglected and starved for the parental love which is denied her, becomes embittered, and when Bancroft returns with a new wife, married only for the possibility of a son, the girl reveals her bitterness, and leaves the home. She marries Ames shortly after.

Then comes the collapse. Bancroft is left alone; his new wife leaves him, the daughter is gone and he is in financial straits. He has just completed a new ship in competition with Ames and beats the latter to a fat contract. Suddenly seeing the light, he rushes out to the ways and in a highly dramatic sequence which tightened its hold upon the audience, he fights off the men who think he is mad, and sends the still unfinished ship down the ways and to the bottom, Ames getting the contract automatically.

A reconciliation with the daughter and her husband follows, and a concluding sequence shows Bancroft happy with the children of his daughter. Sharp photography and the obvious authenticity of the settings were thought to have added greatly to the effectiveness.

Produced and distributed by Paramount. Directed by John Cromwell. Screen play by Grover Jones and Edward Paramore, Jr. Suggested by the Charles Dickens story, "Dombey and Son." Photographed by David Abel. Release date, November 14, 1931. Running time, 80 minutes.

The Rainbow Trail

(Fox)

Western

Zane Grey's familiar western tale of the same title forms the basis of this film, in which George O'Brien plays the hero who rights the wrongs, outwits the villain and weds the heroine, played by Cecilia Parker; while Niles Welch and W. L. Thorne contrive to be convincing co-villains of the piece, it was thought.

The story was filmed in the beautiful Grand Canyon country of Arizona, and much praise was accorded the photographers for the scenic shots, generally conceded to be beautiful and to have done much in enhancing the ultimate result from the audience standpoint of the film as a whole.

When James Kirkwood is shot from ambush, O'Brien finds him, dying. Before passing away, he tells O'Brien that he was in search of a man, woman and girl who imprisoned themselves in a secret valley years before. O'Brien decided to avenge Kirkwood and find the family. Thorne, however, has already stolen the girl, Miss Parker, from the valley. O'Brien is in danger when he makes a connection with Thorne's outfit. Accidentally, he meets Miss Parker, and she, fearing to tell him who she is, says the girl is dead. O'Brien saves an Indian girl from the attentions of Welch and the Indians befriend him.

They succeed in saving his life when he is about to be tossed off a cliff. Thorne approaches Miss Parker, and when repulsed, threatens to kill the two remaining in the valley. When he leaves, O'Brien appears and the girl shows him the way to the valley, but is afraid to accompany him. He is able to notify the two occupants of the valley that the girl is safe and that he will rescue them. Captured by Thorne, he is again rescued this time by the Indian girl he saved previously. He and Miss Parker are pursued by Welch and his men, but finally succeed in escaping and sending the pursuers to destruction.

The audience gave every evidence of having been well entertained by the western film story, with hard riding and much action held responsible for the audience interest in the film.

Produced and distributed by Fox. Associate producer, Edward Grainger. Screen story from Zane Grey's novel. Adaptation and dialogue by Philip Klein. Directed by David Howard. Photography, Daniel Clark. Sound, Albert Protzman. Art direction, Win Darling. Release date Jan. 3, 1932.

Suicide Fleet

(RKO Pathe)

Naval Drama Spectacle

Enthusiastic applause given this pretentious production at the RKO Mayfair in New York demonstrated anew the fact that the so-called "war pictures" are not dead provided they are well made, that it is the result, not the theme, that counts.

Written by Commander Herbert A. Jones, veteran in the service of the U. S. Navy, and produced with the active co-operation of the Navy Department at Washington, "Suicide Fleet" tells a story of action at sea and love at home. The romantic element, while woven through the entire story, yet is incidental. Ginger Rogers was well received for her work. And the rough-and-ready "gob" dialogue supplied the comedy.

The term "Suicide Fleet" in reality applies to a clipper ship rigged up for espionage purposes to represent a pseudo-merchantman used by the Germans as espionage contact with the U-boats. In that lies the twist of plot that made the climatic battle scene a different factor in war story.

The "three musketeers" idea is transplanted to the deck of a fighting ship in this production. Bill Boyd, Robert Armstrong and James Gleason are the trio, Boyd and Armstrong being Coney Island concessionaires and Gleason a rubberneck megaphoner. All three are in love with Ginger Rogers.

When the three enlist, Boyd wins the upperhand in the friendly badgering because of his previous service, and is made an ensign. They are assigned to a destroyer.

A tramp ship flying the colors of Norway is boarded by a U-boat commander and the ensuing conversation reveals that the sailing vessel is spying upon American troop movements. Boyd, Dutch and Skeets are in the party sent aboard later to investigate and find valuable documents before the crew can burn the ship. Then comes the unusual turn to the plot which makes good the name "Suicide Fleet." The Navy fits up a duplicate of the dynamited ship to cruise in the same area and make contact with the enemy. Boyd is designated skipper and makes Dutch and Skeets members of the crew. U-boats pop up on both sides. Dutch, pseudo-captain because he's the only one who can speak German, is getting along famously until the U-boat commander who had been aboard before the dynamiting joins the conference. Then the battle starts. Boyd's crew makes several hits with its Navy gun, brought out from concealment, but the odds are too great. The destroyers arrive in time. After the war all are back at the old stand, with one exception: Ginger is Boyd's assistant.

Charles R. Rogers production. Harry Joe Brown, associate producer. Directed by Al Rogell from a story by Commander Herbert A. Jones, U.S.N. Screen play by Lew Lipton. Dialogue by F. McGrew Willis. Art director, Carroll Clark. Musical director, Arthur Lange. Costume designer, Gwen Wakeling. Film editor, Joe Kane. Photography, Sol Polito. Recorder, D. A. Cutler. Assistant director, Jay Marchand. Carmen Screened

(Seen in London)

Here is the first attempt this side of the Atlantic to screen the opera classic "Carmen." The result is not an unqualified success, though there is some fine singing from Tom Burke and Lance Fairfax. British International might have been more fortunate in their choice of a prima donna to portray the fiery Latin girl of the story, although undoubtedly one of the principal snags was to find a lass with a voice and not too much physique. Margaret Namara, who plays the part, is physically as attractive as any prima donna could conceivably be, but the quality of her voice does not compare overwell with that of Tom Burke, the leading tenor.

The settings are good, though at no time does the story take on an air of conviction: it is a "single-scenic," which will probably make a definite appeal to the operatic fans (by way of change) with a more limited draw on the fans who like pretty things in pictures.

British International deserve to meet with some success, however, in that this represents a departure from the everlasting bedroom farce, and does aim to break new ground. Namara is an American, which with Tom Burke's international reputation in the musical world, should help the picture through an American run.

Produced and distributed by British International. Directed by Cecil Lewis. Photography by Messrs. Wilson, Grindrod and Elder. Recording R.C.A. Musical arrangement, Doctor Malcolm Sargent. Running time, 91 minutes.

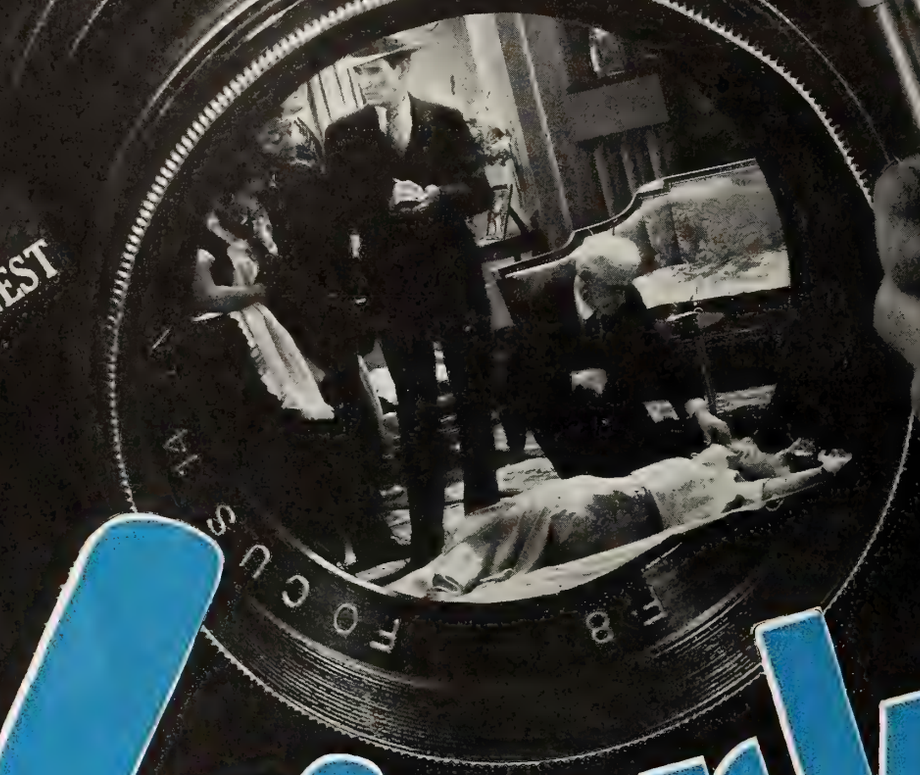
Men in Her Life

(Columbia)

Drama

Charles Bickford, "he-man," and in this case retired and wealthy bootlegger, shows Lois Moran, in the leading role as a wealthy girl, just what being a real gentleman means, though he lacks the polish and veneer which is popularly supposed to stamp the gentleman as such.

Bickford's efforts at doing the right thing at the right time in the society manner evoked gales of laughter in frequent spots from an audience at the Moss Broadway in New York, where the film played.



He is touring France in a grand style with a chauffeur, and the rest, when he comes across wealthy Miss Moran, stranded by a bogus count in a country hotel. He had promised to marry her, then disappeared with her money and jewels, leaving her only the bill to settle. Bickford, who recognizes her from pictures he had seen in newspapers, saves her from an embarrassing situation, and she is hired to make him a gentleman.

Later, in New York, just prior to Miss Moran's marriage to a scion of society, the bogus count turns up and demands heavy blackmail for certain letters. Bickford overhears the demand, and going to the count's hotel room at the appointed time, gets the letters, but kills the count, with the latter's gun, in self-defense. Bickford, on trial for his life, refuses to divulge the reason for his presence in the count's room, and the case seems hopeless, when Miss Moran testifies for him and he is acquitted. The court room scene, particularly authentic as to setting and action, held the Broadway audience closely.

Miss Moran's fiance leaves, and Bickford, not having the courage to propose, feeling himself not in the girl's class, is about to depart also, when she takes the matter into her own hands, and there the film ends.

The Sea Ghost

(Peerless)

Drama

An audience at Loew's, New York, seemed to enjoy this independent production, which is filled with fast action and several thrilling sequences at sea. Particular commendation went to Alan Hale as the lieutenant in the navy, and Laura La Plante. Claude Allister, providing the comedy spots in the film, appeared to tickle the audience in the right manner.

Burnet Hershey wrote the story, which concerns a lieutenant, Hale, discharged from the navy because he had refused to pursue a German submarine in order to save the lives of those occupants of a torpedoed vessel who were in great danger of drowning. He vows to have it out some day with the commander of the submarine. But when he does finally meet him, he changes his mind, as regards the revenge which had been uppermost in his mind, after hearing the German's story.

Meanwhile, Hale has taken a job as captain of a sailing vessel and is accidentally made aware of a plot to swindle a girl out of a large inheritance, when his ship is hired for diving purposes by the girl's attorney. Hale had previously "sworn off" all women when his fiancée had gone back on her word. The chronic aversion to the opposite sex, however, is broken down when he meets the girl, Laura La Plante. Working with her, they succeed in outwitting the lawyer and saving her inheritance.

Pleasantly, however expected, he comes through successfully in his dealing with the crooked attorney and his feeling for the girl.

Produced and distributed by Peerless Productions. Produced under the supervision of Alfred T. Mannon. Directed by William Nigh. Story by Burnet Hershey. Release date, November 1 1931. Running time, 64 minutes.

Surrender

(Fox)

Drama

A German prison camp in the days of the World War and the adjoining ancient Prussian castle on the shores of the bleak and cold Baltic Sea forms the heavily atmospheric setting for this dramatic effort, in which Warner Baxter plays the French prisoner and Leila Hyams, the daughter of Prussian patriotism who falls in love with the enemy.

The photography in itself, serving as it did to enhance the picture's background, held closely the attention of a crowded house at the New York Roxy, as did the story itself. The verdict of numerous of those present was rather highly commendatory of the fine characterizations throughout. Noteworthy were the performances of Miss Hyams, Warner Baxter, Ralph Bellamy as the commander at the prison; C. Aubrey Smith as the old Prussian general who sends four sons to the war; Alexander Kirkland as one of the sons, engaged to Miss Hyams.

Baxter comes to the camp with a group of French prisoners, and attempts to escape the same night. They fail in the attempt and are put in the hard labor detail. Breaking into the castle during their attempt, Baxter meets Miss Hyams, niece of the old general, and at that moment he and his comrades are surrounded. He blames the girl. Later he is set to wire the castle for electricity, and the romance goes well on its way. The commander of the prison is also in love with the girl, but the attraction is hardly mutual.

The son who is engaged to Miss Hyams returns on leave, and realizing she does not love him, returns to the front, but unfortunately is seen by Baxter in the girl's arms. His comrades attempt again to escape and Baxter aids them. Again they are captured and this time sentenced to death. The girl, overcoming her distaste through her love of Baxter, implores the commander to cancel the death order, which he does. Notification of the signing of the Armistice arrives a moment after the order is rescinded and the girl and Baxter, enemies, are united by their mutual feeling. The commander, badly scarred by the war, kills himself rather than face the future in physical incapacity.

The Roxy audience was held to a tense state of attention throughout the film, indicated by its readiness to grasp the slightest opportunity to laugh, as a means of relieving the tension. It may be duly reported that the attending patrons appeared well entertained by the picture.

Produced and distributed by Fox. Directed by William K. Howard. From the play, "Axelle" by Pierre Benoit. Screen play by Sonya Levien, S. N. Behrman. Photographed by James Wong Howe. Sound, Albert Protzman. Release date, December 6, 1931. Running time, 69 minutes.

Submarine Thrills

Some months ago when the British submarine Poseidon was rammed in Chinese waters, and several lives were saved by the use of the Davis life-saving apparatus, some stirring tales were told of men who went down with the craft, and had to wait hours at the bottom of the sea, while the water poured into their "steel tomb" before they could with any hope of escape attempt the use of their only weapon against certain death.

Over a year back the Fox company released a submarine picture, "Men without Women," in which trapped men were fired by their companions through the torpedo tubes. That was fantastical, but effective. In this British International picture we have an actual reconstruction of the disaster, produced under the supervision of Admiralty experts, and one or two of the actual survivors of the Poseidon wreck. Maybe as a concession to this official interest, the dialogue has been permitted to take on a strictly national and highly patriotic flavor which will hinder the picture in foreign markets. A good idea might be to tone down some of the material introduced obviously as appeal to patriotic British audiences, for as an unusual film, with amazing realism and heart thumping thrills, this picture has never been surpassed by anything seen by this writer, and should please everywhere.

The interior of the submarine is seen under normal sailing conditions, and then the confusion of the smash, and the terrible hours which followed until the men, equipped with their death defying masks, rose to the sea surface and were picked up by the rescue boats. Walter Summers, its director, and the cameramen, Jack Parker and Horace Wheddon, have made a fine job of this one, which, subject to the qualifications already laid down, ought to hold any audience.

Produced and distributed by British International. Directed by Walter Summers. Photographed by Jack Parker and Horace Wheddon. Running time, 47 minutes. Recording, R.C.A.

Heroes All

(Imperial Films)

War Scenes

"Heroes All" is made up of carefully selected stock reel shots of the Great War, and offers a piece of propaganda against war in general, meaning to graphically portray its stark and rather gruesome reality as opposed to the glamour which surrounds the universal calamity in the popular conception.

Appropriate sound effects have been dubbed into the shots, with what was conceded to be fair effectiveness. Emile Gauvreau, editor of the New York Daily Mirror, renders the accompanying dialogue in a not too prepossessing voice, which, incidentally is often made almost unintelligible by the ever-present sound.

In a preceding sequence Gauvreau is seen in his office in conversation with General John J. Bradley, retired United States Army officer, wherein the two discuss war and the necessity of picturing for the younger generation the realities of modern mechanized warfare, as a means of conveying an idea of its horrors.

Succeeding sequences in the reels which follow show the various allied armies separately marching to the front, fighting and returning from the trenches. Several scenes are outstanding, in particular, that of opposing battalions engaged in a hand-to-hand bayonet struggle in the enemy trenches. Also seen are the several leaders of the Allied forces, including General Pershing, Marshall Haig, Marshal Joffre, Marshal Foch and others. Interesting are the scenes of the famous Alpine troops of the Italian army, who struggled over the snow covered mountain passes on skiis, dressed in white uniforms and hoods as a camouflage.

Presented by William M. Pizor. Distributed by Imperial. Edited by Nathan Cy Braunstien. Prologue by General John J. Bradley and Emile Gauvreau. Accompanying dialogue by Emile Gauvreau. Release date, November 11, 1931. Running time, 58 minutes.

Very Amusing

Slim Summerville and Harry Gribbon again, and though the yarn is very similar to most of the others, it doesn't really matter as far as the extremely funny result is concerned. Slim the bugler and the top sergeant, Gribbon, are in Central America this time and, of course, both after the same girl. The warm time is supplied when Slim decides to typewrite a letter to the girl. But the machine is being used as a detonator, and every time Slim strikes a key, a shack in the vicinity blows up with a great splash. Finally the one in which he sits goes the way of the others. The finish provides a great laugh.—Running time, 21 minutes.

In Wonderland
(Universal)
Good

Oswald saves his grandmother, in this animated cartoon, when the mortgage falls due by planting the magic bean. He climbs the beanstalk and succeeds in getting down and home with the girl and the magic goose who lays eggs of gold. A rather clever idea and well synchronized.—Running time, 6 mintues.

Harem Secrets
Pleasing

Claude Fleming visits the Far East in this number of the Romantic Journeys series. A Multicolor camera aids Fleming materially in extracting some unusually pleasing photographic effects scenically, the colors being especially well blended. It is interesting when the camera takes in the interior of a harem. Brown-Nagel produced.—Running time, 11 minutes.

Believe It Or Not
(Vitaphone)
Entertaining

Robert Ripley, cartoonist extraordinary, in the first of his new series of drawn and otherwise pictured oddities, and a short which is vastly entertaining, interesting and somewhat amusing. Best bit is the origin of the three balls as the insignia of the pawn shop. This short is devoted to scenes picked up by Ripley in Africa. Ripley is the guide for the audience. —Running time, 8 minutes.

Bali
Splendid

One of the FitzPatrick travel shorts made for MGM and a most entertaining and interesting subject. The island of Bali, a South Sea paradise, gently ruled by the Dutch and for the most part left to go its own calm, tranquil and antiquated way. A most unusual spot, and splendidly handled.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Foiled
Suspense

A William J. Burns Detective mystery, recounted by the famous detective and dramatized by a cast. Suspense is there and the manner in which the police discover the murderer of a host at a card party is interesting. Prior to his murder, the host had been forcing his attentions upon a guest. Her husband and several others become suspects, until it is proved that the house detective is the criminal.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Turkey
(Columbia)
Fair

A John P. Medbury Travelaughs number, Walter Futter production, in which important scenes in Turkey are accompanied by Medbury's own style of humor. Only fairly well received on Broadway.—Running time, 9 minutes.

Colorful Jaipur
(MGM)
Fine

A good example of the excellent series of travel films which FitzPatrick has produced for MGM release. An audience at the New York Capitol gave voice to its approval with applause. This number is the camera record of a really colorful spot on the globe, little known but possessed of decided interest to eyes of an audience of the western part of the world. India is always fascinating, this bit is equally so.—Running time, 9 minutes.

Stung
(RKO Radio)
Fair

A surprise in the last spoken words of this short feature is the entire "punch." Without that, the picture would be very little but the routine of a gang film courtroom scene. With it, there is a bit of real comedy. The defense counsel has "fixed" a witless juror to hold out for a manslaughter verdict. He is successful, but explains after the trial that the other jurors wanted to turn the defendant free. Running time, 8 minutes.

Half Holiday
Amusing

Andy Clyde, always the good comedian, handles here the sort of role for which his manner of studied and hurt innocence best fits him. When one of his co-workers urges him to take a Saturday afternoon off and to step out a bit, he succumbs, against his best judgment. Unfortunately for Andy, but to the amusement of the audience, it doesn't happen quite as Andy had hoped, and he trudges back to loving but insistent wife and a routine of homely chores. Clyde, and good as usual.—Running time, 21 minutes.

Ya Don't Know What You're Doin'
(Vitaphone)
Good

Third number of the Merrie Melodies series and one which made rather a decided hit at the New York Winter Garden. Concerns a girl taken to the theatre where anyone who desires may join in the singing. Both the music and synchronization are top-notch.—Running time, 7 minutes.

Voice of Hollywood
(Tiffany)
Fan Interest

Roscoe Ates plays master of ceremonies in this, number 7 of Series B. Stars off the set come in for their share of light attention. The stutterer spends most of the time attempting to have Robert Montgomery, Anita Page, Jean Hersholt and John Miljan write their names on his shirt. Lola Lane renders a vocal number. Fans should be interested.—Running time, 11 minutes.

The Kick-Off
(MGM)
Fair Laughs

One of the Hal Roach-Boy Friends comedy numbers, and the boys do things to a national game in an effort to extract humor from situations built around it. They accomplish their end with a fair measure of success. Mickey Daniels is in the lead. The continuity might have been handled with a bit more care, but the short is amusing.—Running time, 21 minutes.

In Your Sombrero
(Vitaphone)
Good

Rather amusing comedy, when an American reporter is jailed by Central American rebels. A truckload of explosives in cans of vegetables arrives. The reporter's girl friend releases him by hitching the truck to the cell door. They escape in the truck and as the rebels pursue them, the reporter has a great time bombarding them with exploding vegetables of all descriptions.—Running time, 7 minutes.

SELECTIONS

Made by RITA C. McGOLDRICK

THAT productions qualifying for Rita C. McGoldrick's "Selections" are not limited to a particular type of theme or treatment is evidenced by the titles herewith. Among those commended are travelogues, Westerns, dramas, educational subjects, war pictures, mystery plays and comedies. This month's presentation covers practically the entire range of general picture subjects.

In this "selection of selections," which includes the best from the lists of the motion picture committees of social organizations as well as the personal judgments of Mrs. McGoldrick, the pictures are classified as to family and audience suitability and short features are treated separately.

Family Suitability

AROUND THE WORLD IN EIGHTY MINUTES — VERY GOOD
United Artists

An amusing and light-hearted lecture travelogue by Douglas Fairbanks, who recounts on sound film his recent trip through the Far East. The picture reaches a dramatic conclusion among the fakirs of the bazaars of India where we see on the screen the incredible rope trick and the vanishing boy.

CAVALIER OF THE WEST — VERY GOOD
Tec Art

Western—A story of the U. S. Cavalry in the frontier days. The plot centers around the efforts of Captain John Allister to protect the Indians from a band of marauders, headed by a traitorous deputy sheriff, with the resultant dashing horsemanship, swift action and heroics. (Stars: Harry Carey, Kane Richmond, Theodore Adams and Maston Williams.)

CHAMP, THE — EXCELLENT
MGM

Drama in which Wallace Beery and Jackie Cooper as the rough and ready prize-fighter and his adoring, pug-nosed son, face together the battles of the ringside and the poignant battles of their personal problems. The story is conventional, rather slow-moving in its plot formation and rather peaceful in its long stretches of silent acting. But there is nothing mediocre about the extraordinary acting of the drunken, clumsy ex-champ and a little boy called Ding. Illusion suddenly becomes reality and one's heart strings are twisted by the finest dramatic acting we have seen in a long, long time. (Stars: Wallace Beery, Jackie Cooper.)

COUGAR — EXCELLENT
Sidney A. Show

This is a thrilling as well as a splendid educational picture. It tells the dramatic story of the state fight against the ravaging mountain lion, and includes many scenes of courageous combat as well as studies of wild animal life against the natural beauties of mountainous California. This is a picture for all audiences.

EXPLORERS OF THE WORLD — EXCELLENT
Raspin Prod.

Harold Noice, leader of the Tariana Italian Ethnological expedition to Northwestern Brazil, has assembled an extremely able and realistic picture of scientific adventures. Using the novel device of gathering a group of noted explorers around the banquet table, he introduces each man, tells something of his deeds and the man in his turn takes up the story with his own camera record.

HEARTBREAK — GOOD
Fox

Once more we are shown the tragedy of war bursting into the midst of romance and charm. This time a young American at the Viennese embassy falls in love with an Austrian countess. War is declared and the American kills the countess' brother in combat. The undercurrent motif of the drama is the emotional conflict resulting from the necessity of trying to hate those whom it may be more natural to love. War scenes are few while there are many delightful pictures and glamorous settings. (Stars: Charles Farrell, Hardie Albright, Madge Evans.)

LAND OF WANTED MEN — GOOD
Monogram

A Western story of frontier days, with its atmosphere of crude justice; this is acceptable only for those who find something diverting in the heroics and swift action of such pictures. (Stars: Bill Cody and Shiela Manners.)

LOCAL BOY MAKES GOOD — VERY GOOD
First National

A comedy adapted from an amusing stage success of several years ago, "The Poor Nut." Joe E. Brown plays the role of the bashful college student, an experimentalist in botany, who because of his love for a girl, inadvertenly becomes a track runner with all the fame of an athletic success. (Stars: Joe E. Brown, Dorothy Lee and Ruth Hall.)

SPECKLED BAND — GOOD
First Division

Mystery—Sherlock Holemes' melodrama in which suspense is well sustained. Cleverly produced with fine economy of effect and minimum of conversation. (Star: Raymond Massey.)

TWO FISTED JUSTICE — VERY GOOD
Monogram

Western—A story of the Civil War days, in which the citizens stood by Lincoln and kept order on the frontier.

Adult Suitability

DECEIVER, THE — GOOD
Columbia

A mystery play in which a father, knife-throwing property man in a theatre, kills the star through his knife throwing prowess in order to save his daughter from the blandishments of the matinee idol playing "Othello." Clever detective work discovers the murderer after all present are suspected. (Stars: Ian Keith, Lloyd Hughes, Dorothy Sebastian.)

A DANGEROUS AFFAIR — VERY GOOD
Columbia

An exciting and enjoyable mystery story in which two friends, a police lieutenant and a news reporter in a small town, unravel the mystery. A stolen necklace, a will read at midnight, and two murders in an empty house, are parts of the plot. The noisy police methods seem somewhat overdone, but the entertainment value is good. There is well developed action and comedy. (Stars: Jack Holt, Ralph Graves, Sally Blane, Blanche Friderici.)

HEROES ALL — VERY GOOD
Mendelssohn-Young, Inc.

This is the first attempt to make a complete motion picture record of the War as it was fought on every front. Exciting scenes of actual warfare are shown, some of them too vivid for comfort. For the most part, however, the scenes are of the newsreel variety to which we are accustomed. The film was obtained from official allied war sources by Col. Young, vice-president of the production company. It is a vivid reminder of the horrors of war.

RICH MAN'S FOLLY — GOOD
Paramount

Drama—An adaptation of Dicken's "Dombey and Son." For a hundred and fifty years there has been a firm of ship builders known as Trumbull and Son, built on tradition and quality, and to each Trumbull the greatest thing in life is the possession of a son to carry on the firm. George Bancroft plays the role of the father who sacrifices his son to his ideal, ignores his daughter, fighting alone to satisfy his greed for power. (Stars: George Bancroft, Frances Dee, Robert Ames.)

SURRENDER — VERY GOOD
Fox

Drama—A story of the great war laid against the background of a Prussian prison camp in 1917. War's futility and disillusionment are expressed in the defeat of an old Prussian general and nobleman who, believing in the righteousness of his country's cause, gloriously sacrifices his sons. Warner Baxter is ably cast as the hero, an imprisoned French officer. (Stars: Warner Baxter, Leila Hyams, C. Aubrey Smith.)

Foreign Features

FRA DIAVOLO — ADULTS VERY GOOD

A musical film in Italian based on the opera by Auber. Fra Diavolo is one of the revolutionary leaders in revolt against the King of Naples in the latter part of the 18th century. The work of the tenor, Tino Pattiero, is well done. (Stars: Tino Pattiero, Madeline Breville, Armando Bernard, Pierre Magnier.)

IHRE HOHEIT BEFIEHLT (Her Highness Commands) — ADULTS VERY GOOD
Ufa

A German film operetta that has to do with the love of a princess and a captain in the Guards. The princess is modern and her escapades are quite up-to-date. The romance is gay, the music pleasant and the photography excellent. A knowledge of German helps in enjoyment of the picture. (Stars: Willy Fritsch, Kaethe von Nagy, Reinhold Schuenzel, Paul Hoerbizer.)

SEIN LIEBESLIED (His Love Song) — ADULTS VERY GOOD
Ufa

A story of present day Munich with a charming romance between a school girl and an unknown cafe singer. The photography is good and the music gay and tuneful. A few English subtitles help to interpret the story, which is not hard to follow. (Stars: Willy Forst, Paul Otto, Fee Malten, Oakar Karlweiss.)

KEISERLIEBSHEN ADULTS
(The Kaiser's Sweetheart) GOOD
Tobis

A Viennese musical romance in the days of Empress Maria Theresa. A sentimental tale of a peasant girl who loves an emperor for a brief time, but, through his efforts, finally marries her childhood sweetheart. The production is elaborate and the music pleasant. (Stars: Liane Haid, Walter Janssen, Wilhelm Bendow, Colette Jell.)

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

CHARLES E. "CHICK" LEWIS
Chairman and Editor

An International Association of Showmen Meeting in MOTION PICTURE HERALD
Every Week—for Mutual Benefit and Progress

CONDUCTED BY AN EXHIBITOR FOR EXHIBITORS

You Must Reckon With The Manager Today!

OF ALL the industries that make up the world's activities, none can possibly compare with the peculiar cycles in which ours rotate. Harking back some few years, we all knew that the manager and exhibitor were powerful factors in the industry. They built the theatre, bought the equipment and contracted for the pictures. Naturally, those who had to do business with theatres had to do business with them.

Then we passed through the period when national circuits started to become national in the sense that they were grabbing up theatres as fast as they could possibly close deals. And it was to be expected that under the then popular system of circuit operation the manager did not hold a very important spot. He was "just the custodian of the keys to the cup machine" and a more or less glorified porter.

But that's where the circuits committed their gravest error. An error that has almost plunged some of them into oblivion. And, as was to be expected, the manager took a back seat, so's to speak. He did not cut a large figure in the general make-up of the industry and the man who had something to sell no longer cultivated or bothered with him. They could now deal direct with super-efficient home office or field executives who were the mouth-pieces for the theatre managers. So for a few years the most important cog of a great machine was considered something like excess baggage and given very little of any consideration in the workings of the theatre industry.

But the cycle has made a complete revolution and now again we find that the once scorned house manager is a mighty important factor in this business of selling entertainment and operation of theatres.

He's the first, and quite often the last, word in repairing and replacing of equipment; advertising and exploitation of the product; buying and booking of the pictures. Right on down the line the industry has finally come to realize what an important being this house manager is. Upon his shoulders rests the decision to spend many a dollar in the course of his theatre's operation. And so, once again he has become a most powerful factor and one to be reckoned with in all matters pertaining to the operation of the nation's theatres.

Showmanship, too, as it must be sensibly practiced, is expected of the only person qualified to hold that title; the manager. Producers as well as distributors hearken to his thoughts about what is, or is not, box office product. And ninety-nine times out of a hundred he's right. Which is far from a bad average for any predictor.

All of which is exactly as it should be. The man who drives the automobile is certainly best fitted to steer it. You'd hardly want to ride in a fast moving auto if it were controlled from a point several hundred or a thousand miles away. Then why expect to ride a theatre to profits via the same ridiculous methods. One man and one man alone can be the manager of a theatre. Those in the home office must learn to function so as to assist him in every way and NOT to expect him to run his theatre to suit their ideas and ideals.

As to the ability of these managers to qualify for such responsibility, we can only say that the great majority of them are amply qualified to decide everything that pertains to their theatres. We can assume that if they are capable of managing the theatre they are likewise capable of saying what they need in order to run the house and the kind of product that will get the most money at the box office. Why not? Aren't they right there on the spot? Surely they can sense the reactions of the patron far better than anyone removed from the actual seat of operation.

So now, you Hollywood producers; you manufacturers of theatre equipment; you exchange salesmen and sales-managers; take a tip from one who is in a pretty darned good position to know; in all of your plans for the future; in all of your advertising to sell your product; in all of your activities in your respective lines; remember you must once again reckon with the house manager. Forget those wedges you once thought you had in the home office. Disregard the loud-mouth advisors who tell you that so-and-so can get you orders, or sell your film, or replace equipment. The man you want to appeal to, the man you must convince about your line of goods; the man who will say "yes" or "no", is the man on the firing line, the manager of the theatre.

Carl Sherred Put Over Relief Fund Show In Big Way

All Club members will be interested to learn that the first report of a show held for the Unemployment Relief Fund was a great success from every point of view. We refer to the one put over by Carl B. Sherred, manager of the Mishler Theatre in Altoona, Pa. The house was crowded to capacity during the performance, the best of local talent contributed their services and the Mayor of the city acted as master of ceremonies the first half of the program.

There can be no doubt but that every one connected with the affair did their utmost to make the event an outstanding one. The Mayor personally headed the promotion of the show and took an active part not only in acting as M. C., but enlisted the services of a number of women to aid in the selling of tickets. The special programs were donated through the courtesy of a local printer and the bill contained the names of many professional and amateur performers who contributed to the occasion. The newspapers gave whole-hearted support with an ad, front-page stories and photos.

While we have Sherred "on the spot," let us cite an instance of when the two-for-one ticket scheme can be made a lifesaver over a tough situation. In this particular instance there was nothing wrong with the picture, "Waterloo Bridge"; it had plenty of strength, but all opposition was particularly strong. First day receipts were terrible and some kind of a trick had to be turned to save the show. So on Saturday night at 11 o'clock he arranged with the president of the local street railway company to have conductors on all cars hand out a two-for-one ticket made for the occasion which plugged both theatre and railway. Twenty-three thousand of these were given out and the picture went over the top in great style, with the effect of the stimulus in evidence for the next two weeks.

Sherred is not a believer in the use of the above ticket gag, but, as he states, there comes a time when every manager finds himself in a tough spot and is forced to make some radical departure from ordinary procedure in order to come out on top. In this case, his move secured the desired returns and instead of censuring this Round Tabler we think he is to be congratulated for making a display of unusually good judgment.

We are also mighty glad to be able to pass along a report on his relief show so early in the game and hope that other Club members will let us know what methods they used and how matters materialized. If all are as successful as Sherred's, the Fund is in for heavy returns from motion picture theatres.

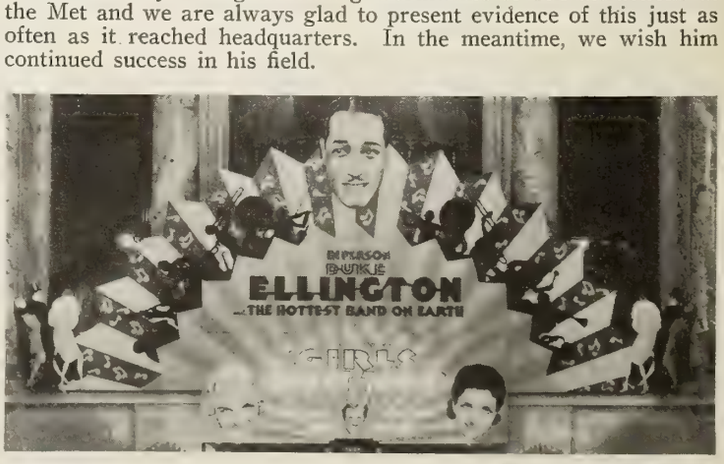
Schmidt Promoted Two Full Page Ads On Football Film

Two full-page co-operative ads were recently promoted by William E. Schmidt, manager of the Capitol Theatre in Williamsport, Pa., in connection with the showings of "The Spirit of Notre Dame." One of these was devoted entirely to the picture, while the other was tied up with a merchant's advertisement.

The ad stated that all patrons attending the theatre would be permitted to present their admission stub at the store where these would be accepted as a $5 down payment on an electric washer. The other co-op carried ads from 11 merchants, each one featuring a picture and name of the Notre Dame player who appeared in the picture. Readers were invited to correctly list the positions on the team played by the boys. Both co-ops figured importantly in advertising the picture.

The co-op on the football team players appears to be a corker, particularly so if used while the season is still on. With the exception of a few passes the stunt can be engineered at no cost to theatre and it should be the means of attracting much attention from the average football-minded public.

More Evidence Of Floyd Bell's Work At Boston Theatre



We've often had occasion to let other Club members in on what is going on at the Metropolitan Theatre, the big Publix house in Boston, Mass., where all matters of publicity are under the supervision of that enterprising showman, Floyd Bell. The following briefly outlines two recent advertising stunts.

On the occasion of the 6th Anniversary of the house he arranged for the baking of a huge cake, made by a local baker in the form of a replica of the Metropolitan. The young woman in the accompanying photo is Miss Angeline Maney, assistant to Bell in the publicity department. The building is cleverly reproduced as to outside detail and on the bottom step you can see the six candles.

The other photo shows the Metropolitan's inner lobby and a corking display made for the occasion of a visit paid the house by Duke Ellington and his band, booked along with the feature "Girls About Town." Note the cutout figures of players along the display and the other figures at either side. If any reader is familiar with the proportions of this inner lobby, some idea may be gained of the size of this display. This theatre is one of the largest houses in New England.

Bell is always doing something worthwhile to sell attractions at the Met and we are always glad to present evidence of this just as often as it reached headquarters. In the meantime, we wish him continued success in his field.

Garry Lassman Made Debut In Troy With Big Parade Of Autos

It didn't take Garry Lassman very long to let the Trojans of Troy, N. Y., know that he had been assigned as manager of the Lincoln Theatre in that city, according to some information we've been able to gather concerning this Round Tabler's activities in this up-state city of collars and shirts and what have you. The occasion was "Should a Doctor Tell" and there's no doubt that the locals all knew that the show was in town.

Part of his advance campaign on the above mentioned picture consisted of the running of five two-column teaser ads in a local newspaper two days in advance of opening, an effort that indicated and proved excellent judgment. As another advance move, he also had 10,000 heralds made up and distributed from house to house. These were special heralds which arbitrarily set forth the question of "whether a doctor should tell."

As you will see in the accompanying illustration, his big parade of new automobiles, promoted through the courtesy of a large motor sales company in the city, was the highlight of his campaign. All cars were bannered with copy selling the picture and the parade was led by the band of a prominent local school. Traffic in front of the theatre was held up for a 15-minute period. Four motorcycle policemen escorted the procession as it wended its way through the principal thoroughfares of Troy.

As a good-will stunt, he contacted a local orphanage and invited the inmates to attend the opening matinee, this resulting in a lot of free publicity in local papers on the fine showing of the picture for the children.

The last time Club headquarters saw Lassman he was on his way up-state. Now we know he got there and that he has charge of a first-class house. Keep in touch with your brother showmen regularly, Garry, and we'll pass the good words along.

Lewis Plugged Three Pictures By Tie-Ups With Local Concerns

A newspaper tieup in connection with "Monkey Business" and two bakery tieups with "Palmy Days" and "Skyline," were selling aids used by B. Lewis, manager of the Kettler Theatre, West Palm Beach, Fla.

The newspaper used a reader on page two and made reference to the classified ad page. Here, was a two-column 7½-inch ad on the picture. In the ad was a picture of two of the Marx brothers, with one of them asking a question of the other. Readers were invited to fill in the balloon the answer to the question made by the other brother. However, it was necessary to have this answer tie in with the classified ad section. The theatre donated guest tickets for the answers and the newspaper plugged the stunt for three days in advance with readers and reproduction of the ad on the classified ad page.

The "Palmy Days" tieup with the bakery netted the theatre 3,000 glassine bags of cakes, imprinted with the copy pertaining to picture, theatre and playdates, with caption, "It Out-Whoops Whoopee." The cakes were distributed from the theatre by a special page boy dressed in baker's costume of cap and apron on which was lettered "Palmy Days." This took place during a midnight show for the unemployed and the following morning, the opening day of picture, the remainder of the cakes were distributed store to store by two boys, also in baker's costumes. Entire cost was borne by the bakery.

Immediately following the above tieup a second one was made with another baker which gave the theatre free distribution of 3,000 heralds in loaves of bread as plug for "Skyline." Distribution covered 20 miles to the north and south and 50 miles to the west. It was effected by the usual method of inserting guest ticket notices inside the wrappers.

Lewis is on the job down his way and now that the big season in Florida is coming on we'll expect to hear a lot more about what he's doing to put over his shows.

ROUND TABLE BIOGRAPHIES

In show-business practically all his life, Harry L. Moller started in the game at the age of nine years as an acrobat, aerialist and wire walker. He has traveled with the leading circuses and was for some time an understudy for the late Park-Buyers, the World's Greatest Bounding Wire Artist.

Harry L. Moller

Well, Harry kept bounding along, playing the better time vaudeville and leading road shows during the winter seasons, until at the age of 16 some one told him he could sing. So he henceforth included a song in his act and became known as the "Man Who Sings to Beat the Band."

At 18 years of age he took over the management of his first theatre, the Bijou of Charlotte, Mich., and in succeeding years managed many theatres from Coast to Coast. He is now in his fourth year with the Schine Theatre Enterprises, going to the new Holland Theatre in Bellefontaine from a Schine house in Sidney, Ohio. He was a former resident of Bellefontaine and his present situation fits like the paper on the wall.

Keeping Up With The Times!

By GUY JONES

Says the Manager to the Producer!

F. D. Nance Has A Slant On How Two-For-Ones Can Pay

The practice of issuing Two-for-Ones is frowned upon by many showmen, including F. D. Nance, general manager of Hall Industries Theatres, Beeville, Texas; however, he has hit upon a scheme whereby the greater portion of the curse attached to this custom has been alleviated by use of a simple little gag; namely, making the patron pay a percentage of the cost of the extra admission. He has found this a means of helping a house over many a tight spot during the past year and thinks it might be useful to others to try out over the coming season, should they be in need of such a remedy.

He uses a coupon book with 20 tickets in it, reading as follows: "Admit One—When Accompanied by One Paid Adult Admission—At Any Hall's Theatre. (Void After December 31, 1931.)" These are printed up four to a sheet, and five sheets to a book. The cover reads, "Hall Industries Prosperity Tickets—$10 Worth of Tickets for Only $1.—Good At Any Hall Industries Theatre."

Prior to trying out this method his experience with two-for-ones reflected a lack of enthusiasm on the part of prospective patrons when coupons were issued by a tied-in merchant. In other words, the mere fact that he or she obtained the coupons for nothing, these immediately lost all value. But by charging them a minimum price of $1, value was again in evidence and experience again proved that they would use every one of the tickets in order to effect the saving and secure the entire $10 value. And for every $10 used in tickets, the box office sold $10 worth of admission tickets.

Not long ago we told you how Nance effected considerable saving by using a poster route sheet over the entire circuit of Hall houses and now we learn that quite an extensive campaign on "Dirigible" was handled a la roadshow. The film was booked in consecutive dates and his art department arranged a front on a roadshow scale. The theatre truck was put in use to haul this display, which included a 24-foot electric sign; eight-foot panels of Holt and Graves; cut-out displays with moving dirigibles; stills mounted on panels; balloons, and several dirigible models. The advance campaign consisted of numerous window tie-ups in all towns; teaser campaigns use of mailing lists; personal letters to all city officials; roto heralds in every home on opening day, and a follow-up with "last chance today" heralds.

As a stimulator to all managers on the circuit, he also arranged for a contest on the most effective campaign, offering a cash prize as an inducement. Interest ran high throughout the entire period and many new angles on exploitation were turned in. Competition among the men was very keen and on the whole business on this picture was entirely satisfactory.

Returning to the subject of two-for-ones again, let us reiterate that Nance does not advocate the cutting of prices, nor will he permit any practice that would serve to cheapen theatre policy; but, he does believe that a stimulator such as he has outlined will create that "theatre-going habit" and turn many prospective fans into regular patrons on practically a dollar for dollar box office basis. In these days of shopping for values, the "prosperity tickets" had a psychological reaction, whereas the free distribution had a tendency to lose all value because of "something for nothing."

Beck's Radio Show Went Over Big In Charlotte Theatre

A radio show was recently featured by N. Edward Beck, manager of the Carolina Theatre, Charlotte, N. C., that drew and pleased many patrons. In addition to the give-away of a radio, handled in the usual fashion, a special act was presented on the stage with a huge radio in the background. The act featured twelve girls in line doing routine and solo by a girl in costume, who was apparently hidden in the radio and shown only when the lights were brought up. This was followed by a specialty tap dance which was unusually good.

A girl dressed in an afternoon outfit in the afternoons and in evening dress in the evenings, distributed notices on the radio one week in advance. Salesmen from the radio store were at the theatre at nights to explain everything to the patrons. A display of radios was arranged on the mezzanine, which kept the lobby from being crowded. The radio that was given away was on display in the lobby with modernistic announcement sign in the background, and was taken to the stage on the final night.

The above stunt cost next to nothing for reason that the radio was promoted by Beck and the stage presentation added greatly to the general scheme. Club members who occasionally promote radios to stimulate trade might try the addition of the little act as a change from regular procedure. Still another stunt which is meeting with favor in various theatres is the auctioning off of a radio, usually handled in connection with some benefit show.

Perry Spencer And Lew Preston Staged Big Birthday Revue

When a team of showmen such as Lew Preston and Perry Spencer pair-up to put over an anniversary, you can rest assured that box office receipts will show considerably above normal and that the public will be in for a series of stunts to make it sit up and take notice. Preston is the manager of the Academy of Music, a Fox house in New York City, and Spencer is publicity director for Skouras Brothers' New York theatres. This occasion was the fifth anniversary of the house and the event was celebrated for an entire week.

The campaign was started three weeks in advance with special announcement by trailers and careful planning of a well balanced program of stage and screen entertainment. Brooke Johns was sent in by Skouras Brothers to act as master of ceremonies, which really amounted to a reunion between Johns, Preston and Spencer, since this trio has been closely associated with the business of selling shows several years ago. Any one who knows anything about Johns, knows that when it comes to putting over a show he's there with both feet.

One of the photos on this page shows Johns and several girls from the Fanchon & Marco Revue, "Limehouse Nights," gathered around an eight-foot birthday cake which was placed in the theatre lobby. The cake was later taken out in front of the house where Johns and the girls attracted a lot of attention with some amusing capers, to the extent that several policemen had to be called to handle the crowds.

A special tie-up made with the manufacturers of "Life-Savers" resulted in the distribution of 25,000 samples of new product being pushed by the company. The mints were enclosed in small envelopes inscribed with tie-up copy for the company and theatre, the latter featuring "Heartbreak," the Revue and Anniversary Week.

Another stunt that worked out nicely was the old candle-burning gag. A candle measuring six feet in length was secured and placed in a window a few blocks away from the theatre. We believe that most readers are familiar with the methods of handling one of these affairs. The candle is lit at a certain hour and pedestrians are invited to use their skill to ascertain how many hours the candle will burn until entirely consumed. This attraction lasted for about five days and all it cost the house was a few passes, and it had a tendency to bring people back in order that they might find out the extent of their judgment. A great many correct answers were received, testimony that considerable thought was used in computation.

Another lobby stunt that was the occasion of much interest and successfully exploited the coming attraction, "Cisco Kid," is shown by another accompanying photo. It shows a young fellow dressed as Edmund Lowe, sitting in the lobby with a gun in his hands. The sign when first placed on the box read, "I Am Waiting for the Cisco Kid—He will Be Here in Seven Days." Each day the number of days was changed until the picture was due to be shown. Still another ballyhoo that was used outside the theatre was the "upside-down man," another one that most everybody knows how to work out.

Figures express to a greater degree than mere words the success attending the efforts put forth by Preston and Spencer, for we have it on authority that the box office was in a mighty healthy condition at the close of this Anniversary Week.

"I AM STILL RICH"

WE HAVE PASSED THROUGH a panic; we have suffered from a crash on the stock market. But I am still rich.

It may be true that I have much less to live on than I had a year ago, but it is certainly also true I have just as much to live for. The market failed, but nothing else did. Prices went down, but not one acre of land lost its fertility.

All the electrons, atoms and ether waves went on working in their accustomed ways.

When the depression came, I was compelled to take an invoice and soon discovered I was still rich. My $250,000 eyes are just as good as they ever were. Every landscape and sunset are mine if I want them. $20,000 scenes and views are added to my collection almost every week.

My $100,000 sense of hearing is still unimpaired and so I have access to a world of beauty and inspiration.

My million dollar stomach and half million dollar appetite are just as good as they ever were. There is no need for me to eat spinach the rest of my life.

DEPRESSION HAS NOT LOWERED the value of a single friendship. Neighbors still greet us in the same old cordial way; business associates believe in us, our sons hold us in high respect. Our wife's welcome at the close of day has not depreciated in the least, and our daughters continue to lavish their affection upon us in the same old extravagant way.

The prayers my mother taught me and the faith in God instilled in me by a devout Christian, my father, still remain as priceless treasures no depression can touch.

Financial crisis may bring business to a standstill, but character is beyond its reach. It can rob us of all we have, but it cannot affect what we are. The nicest satisfactions of life—those which come from sharing and serving—remain secure.

The investments we make in ambitious youths, in hospitals, in crippled children's homes, in colleges and in service institutions go on paying dividends.

I am still rich because I am independently rich. None of my wealth depends upon business conditions or market reports.

Freedman Made Six Reel Local Picture And Won Out At B.O.

Since coming to Hempstead, Long Island, N. Y., from the Northwest, A. Zack Freedman, manager of the Fox-Hempstead Theatre, has kept things humming out his way with a number of stunts, among which was the achievment of producing a six-reel local film at no cost to theatre. As the result of this, his box-office returns are reported as the highest in the history of the house.

The film was a historical drama depicting the growth of Hempstead over a period of 70 years, with enough romance injected to pep up a subject of this kind. Every scene was shot in the town except the early period shots, which were made from old still pictures. The citizens contributed to making up the cast and a local boy and girl were chosen for the romantic parts. Civic departments cooperated and even the Mayor appeared in the picture. The picture took six weeks in the making and approximately 7,000 feet of film. All production costs were defrayed by town merchants, who also paid for the co-ops used in connection with the stunt. A week before the picture opened, 20,000 circulars were distributed over an area of 15 miles. In addition to regular newspaper ads, three-sheets were also posted at advantageous points.

The picture ran four days to capacity business and the police had to be called out to handle the crowds on opening night. A Chinky restaurant, where one of the "night" scenes was made, did such a nice trade as the result of advertising received that the proprietor is still rendering thanks. Although the picture was a silent one, Freedman gave a running description, a la McNamee, by talking through regular sound reproducers behind the screen.

In many instances the cost of making a film of this kind would be a prohibitive undertaking for a small theatre, but when it can be accomplished at no cost, such as handled by Freedman, the possibility of reviving this popular old stunt becomes apparent to many who may be contemplating a move of this kind. True, there is considerable work entailed, but there is also much to be accomplished for the good of all concerned. We're mighty glad to know that this Round Tabler is getting along so famously in his new location and will look forward to hearing more about what he is doing in Hempstead.

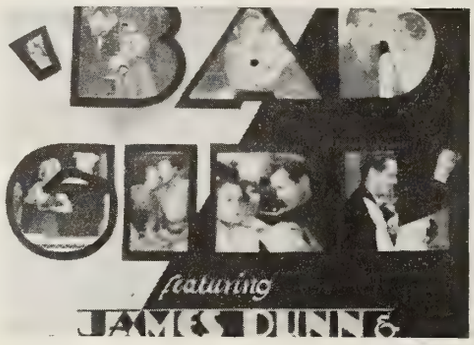
NEW YEAR'S EVE SHOW!

NOW is the time to get started on that special midnight show. Most of the live-wire managers have already made their plans and are probably advertising the big night.

Most of the home-town folk in your community are going to spend New Year's Eve locally; they won't be spending a lot of money for a vacation in the nearby big city. So see that they all know about the Gala Party to be held at your theatre to welcome in the New Year.

Try to dig up some stage talent, professional or local, but if local, be darned sure that they're good or the spirit (?) of the occasion may move some slightly comical patron to start the razzberries. Don't let a good show become spoiled through any oversight on your part. Lay your plans carefully and well in advance, figure out each and every detail of the performance, see that everything is prepared and nothing left to the last minute.

If any sort of novelties or noise-makers are to be distributed, get them ordered long before Christmas and you won't be disappointed. Ditto for the clown outfits for your ushers, etc.



Here's a glorious chance to stage a grand party that will give them plenty to talk about for weeks after. Tie the newspaper into it if you can and get the benefit of their cooperation and publicity.

Don't permit past records to bother you one bit. Make up your mind that there are several hundred dollars to be made on one of these shows and your house can use that dough very nicely.

Dempsey Waged Two Corking Campaigns On New Attractions

The usual brand of fine showmanship is being turned out by J. J. Dempsey, manager of the Strand Theatre in Lowell, Mass., unique lobby displays and result-producing newspaper advertising featuring recent campaigns made on "Bad Girl" and "American Tragedy." Regarding the former, it is quite evident that the sensational angle implied by the title was entirely eliminated from his display ads and the human interest angle played up instead.

Note in the small photo how he used the title of the picture to fashion an attractive display of stills from the picture. Another striking lobby display consisted of advance teaser cards of circular form, each carrying the following copy: "Vivid—In Its Realism; Overpowering—In Its Sincerity; Human — In Its Revelation; Rich — In Its Laughter; Tender — In Its Beauty." The title also appeared on each card, following copy. The other photo shows how he dressed the entrance to lobby.

The preview gag was played up strongly on "American Tragedy" and this netted a fine break from the newspaper. It first appeared in a two-column story, inviting 200 people to submit reviews on the picture, and this was followed by a series of stories listing names of entrants and the published review chosen as the most outstanding. The winner was rewarded in the usual fashion. Special tickets were printed for admission to the preview.

We've also been able to get a line on another Dempsey campaign and this will be published at an early date. In the meantime, we'll get our scouts out and gather up some more information concerning this enterprising Round Tabler's activities. We have just received from this showman a peach of a campaign made on "Spirit of Notre Dame," which contains some mighty interesting slants.

Cox Tied Up With Stationery Stores For Several Plugs

Help from two stationery stores was obtained by Albert G. Cox, manager of the Irving Theatre in Wilkes-Barre, Pa., when he waged his selling campaign on "Secrets of a Secretary."

Inasmuch as the picture played the theatre the week of September 3-9, these two stores used a rubber stamp on all their statements which they sent out the first of the month. Copy on these rubber stamps pertained to the picture, theatre, star and playdates. This stunt gave a direct contact to many stenographers and bookkeepers.

A radio plug stressed the angle of a secretary who saw society as it really existed and found herself caught in the whirlpool of the fast pace that her employer's daughter was leading.

One of the stationery stores distributed a small replica of a stenographer's notebook with the first page printed in shorthand. The second page in print offered guest tickets to the theatre to see the picture for transcriptions sent to the stationery store. These little notebooks were distributed in all stores, offices, banks and factory buildings. The local secretarial school received these little notebooks with a supply sufficient for every student in the school.

Since the stationer received over 300 replies it is quite evident that Cox's little gag had a far-reaching effect, the first two days' business at the theatre showing that the majority of stenographers and secretaries had been covered by the booklets.

GROUPING THE ADS!

Those who must sell via group advertising should look over this layout, which is one of the many employed in the daily papers to sell the shows for Shea's Theatres in Buffalo, N. Y.

While the entire group appear as a unit ad, it must be admitted that no one house suffers from this particular kind of treatment. If anything, it tends to draw the eye of the reader to the big "splash" and thereby give him a good reason to look at what the various houses are playing.

This type of advertising has gained in popularity where more than one theatre is located in the same community or town. Just how some of the others are handling similar situations and advertising will be conveyed from time to time through the medium of reproducing this kind of group advertising.

Excellent Windows Secured By Glaser During Anniversary

In connection with Anniversary Week at the Strand Theatre in Carlisle, Pa., Manager Arthur B. Glaser, arranged for two excellent window displays to advertise the event. One of the displays, made with a drug store, contained incense to play up "Son of India" and was trimmed with special colors of crepe paper with cut-out of the different stars, stills and scenes placed throughout the display.

A large cake was also placed in the drug store window with an art card carrying stills and copy playing up the week's attractions. The public was invited, in the usual fashion, to estimate the weight of the cake.

The display in a jewelry store showed a cut of Novarro giving a diamond to a girl, and people were also asked to name the lady shown in cut. The marquee and front of theatre were elaborately dressed with flags and pennants to help create an atmosphere for the occasion.

While this is Glaser's first contribution to this department, we hope that he'll come through again with further information concerning show-business in his town. The complete plan for his anniversary campaign is lacking, but we've set down all we had at hand and feel sure that success attended his efforts.

ROUND TABLE BIOGRAPHIES

M. A. Malaney doesn't quite know why he entered show business at the age of 12 years, but enter it he did and he's been at it off and on—mostly on—ever since. He was born in Cleveland, Ohio, December 20, 1889, and was educated in grammar and high schools of this city. Further information of a personal nature discloses he is married and the father of three children.

M. A. Malaney

At the mentioned tender age of 12, the lure of a nickelodeon proved too much for him and we next visualize him as a ticket taker and manipulator of a phonograph in one of Cleveland's early "pitcher" shows.

Some time after this flurry in show-business, he took to newspaper work and put in five years of editorial work on papers in Cleveland, Columbus and Chicago. But the show germ was in his system, for he forsook journalism, drifting back into the theatre game via the advertising department of a major film company. It wasn't long after this step that he crashed active theatre advertising and that's what he's been doing ever since. He has never worked for any other concern in this business except Loew's and he's been associated with this firm for 14 years—and we predict he'll carry on for 14 more.

Burrell Made Great Plea For "Bad Girl" In Special Circular

To offset a popular impression that "Bad Girl" was a sensational picture and as a means to present it in its true light, Johnnie Burrell, manager of Shea's Theatre, Geneva, Ohio, had a special circular made up for wide distribution in his town. You will note from the following reproduction of the letter that anything in the way of a suggestive angle was entirely eliminated in the copy.

IF I COULD TALK TO YOU FACE-TO-FACE!

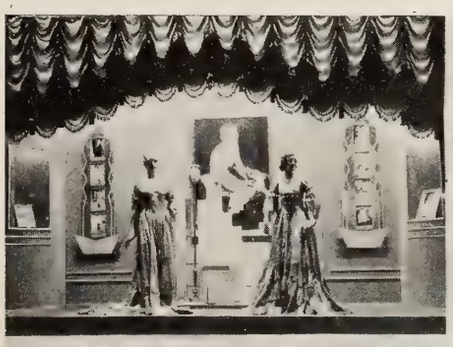
I would tell you about a picture that cannot be described in a regular newspaper advertisement! A picture that has caused hard-boiled showmen to wipe away a tear.

It's Vina Delmar's "BAD GIRL" with Sally Eilers and Jimmy Dunn—a picture that ran for three capacity weeks at the 6,000-seat Roxy Theatre, New York. The picture is far more entertaining than either the book or the stage play. It is not a cheap sensational picture as its title might imply. It is human to the core; all its characters are human; its story is human. Its dialogue is natural and very, very funny! The picture equally divides real laughs with real heart-wrung tears.

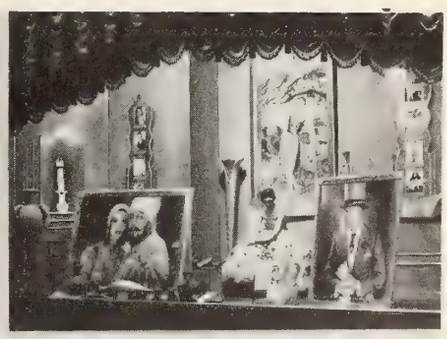
The story is about a poor boy and poor girl getting married and having a baby. The same thing that happens in this story is happening to thousands of young couples every day.

This same great picture is now playing to capacity crowds at the Allen Theatre, Cleveland.

It's not often that I so enthusiastically endorse a picture, but I just can't help telling you to see this picture Sunday and Monday, October 18-19.



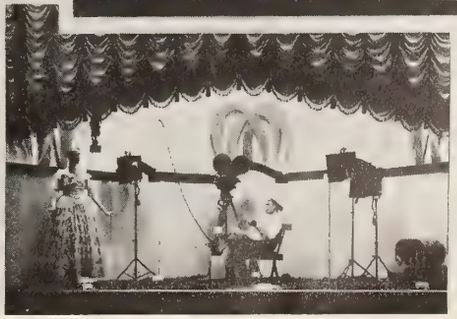
We run continuous Sunday from 1:30 to 11 P. M. The prices are 10 and 30 cents from 1:30 to 6 and 15 and 40 cents from 6 to 11. Attend the matinee if possible as we expect tremendous evening crowds for this attraction. Either make a date or break a date to see "BAD GIRL" next Sunday and Monday.



Sincerely,
JOHNNY BURRELL,
Manager Shea's Theatre.

Actual proof that this letter increased trade to the extent of 15 per cent came direct from the box office, not only in cash returns but many patrons told the cashier that the circular brought them in.

DEPARTMENT STORE FEATURED HOLLYWOOD DISPLAY!



The windows pictured here represent a special exploitation stunt arranged by George Tyson, director of publicity for Warner theatres in the Pittsburgh district. In collaboration with McCreery's, one of the largest department stores in the city, he obtained eleven windows to display a motion picture exhibit sent on from Hollywood. In order to carry out his plans, Tyson had to secure the co-operation of both Warners and First National on the West Coast. Many costumes worn by popular stars were featured in the exhibit, along with sound projection machines of the latest type, an up-to-the-minute camera, sound recording apparatus and other technical material.

Johnnie Ely Offers Advice On Marriage To Clarksvillians

Johnnie Ely, publicity director of the New Lillian Theatre down in Clarksville, Tenn., was the instigator of a program herald of recent issue that was the cause of many a good laugh from patrons of his house. Along with his co-conspirators, Mose Klein and Ralph Goldberg, Goldberg Theatre executives, he got out this program affair with a catch line on the front cover reading, "How to Stay Married—By the famous authors on this subject." The names of Ely, Klein and Goldberg were affixed.

Instructions on the second page listed six rules on making matrimony a success: "No. 1—The only sense of humor you need is a sense of humor. No. 2—Marriage is like an old fashioned melodrama—its tragedies are its biggest laughs. No. 3—If you want to keep kissable—be nonchalant! No. 4—A husband caught on the rebound is like a rubber ball . . . in time he will stop bounding! No. 5—The wife with a smile wins! No. 6—Bring the entire family to see Ina Claire in 'Rebound,' the smart, sparkling comedy for everyone bound for matrimony—or bound by it!" The balance of the spread was devoted to other notes on the picture and the back cover advertised a coming attraction.

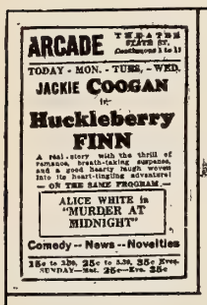
For the information of other Round Tablers none of the trio mentioned above are married or ever have been. Everyone in town is aware of this and that's what made the gag go over in a big way. And as Johnnie states, in a town where everybody knows everybody, a little trick such as this will cause a lot of talk. It's easy to see that Ely is still on the job in his sunny Tennesseean city and now that the holiday season is right around the corner, we'll be looking for information on other stunts. The small photo shown above shows how front of the New Lillian was dressed for "Daddy Long Legs." The figure hanging in center of entrance was 20 feet tall and was made of cloth and beaver-board.

Fred Meyer Plugged Two Pictures With Very Good Results

Fred S. Meyer, managing director of the Alhambra Theatre in Milwaukee, Wis., is on the job as usual when it comes to putting over an advertising campaign that brings home the bacon. We will only deal briefly at this time with the type of advertising used on "Mother's Millions" and "Waterloo Bridge," saving some of the most striking ads for reproduction on another page in a future issue. However, each and every one of the ads carried a punch that was well reflected at the box office. Unique features of both campaigns included a strong plug on the personal endorsement angle on "Mother's Millions," and scene mats on "Waterloo," played up dialogue on the part of one of the characters, leaving a blank balloon for the reader to fill in the most appropriate answer by the other character.

Both photos show how the lobby of the Alhambra was dressed for "Waterloo Bridge," the small one featuring an attractive cut-out and frame of testimonials from prominent critics, and the other presenting a good idea of how the entrance was fixed for the occasion. Note the display over the box office and the frames at either side.

When playing "Great Lover," he succeeded in making a tie-up whereby any patron attending these performances became entitled to a free photograph. The most promising of these were selected and sent to the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios in Hollywood, to be judged for screen possibilities. The ad on this stunt and the one on the picture took up almost a third of the page, the studio of course paying for the former. The whole deal was engineered with co-operation from the local M-G-M exchange.



Most photographers can be sold on the idea of getting in on this sort of stunt for reason that practically every one who has their picture taken will not be satisfied with just one. Additional prints help take care of the overhead, and this, with the valuable advertising received, makes it an attractive proposition in most cases.

What with operating the Alhambra and taking care of duties in the M.P.T.O., Fred Meyer is a pretty busy member of this Club; but he manages to find the time to make interesting contributions just as often as possible. We hope that he'll continue the good work and regarding those ads, you'll see some of them in the near future. He's made a promise to contact this department just as often as he can find time to do so and we'll do our best to see that his ideas are passed along to his fellow showmen.

HOLIDAY TRAILERS AND SHORTS!

To live up to the spirit of the Yuletide you will want some appropriate short subject for the holiday week and, of course, proper trailers with which to greet your patrons.

Due to the limited number of prints placed in each exchange, holiday subjects, or any shorts that tie in with Christmas and New Years must be dated in far in advance. If your booking is handled through another source, get busy and see that they get you set with what you want.

Trailers are necessary and should be secured from whatever company making the type best suited to your type of house and patronage. Most of the trailer companies will be sending out announcements regarding this and will describe in detail the various trailers they are offering. See that you pick the best and have it on hand well in advance of the holidays.

Sablosky Put Over Country Fair Week And Fashion Show

Some time ago we mentioned that the Erlen Theatre in North Philadelphia, Pa., under the direction of Dave R. Sablosky had become a definite part of community life, in view of the fact that this showman had succeeded in enlisting the whole-hearted cooperation of so many merchants whenever there arose an occasion for the promotion of a show designed to promote the welfare of both theatre and stores. At that time, we also mentioned that two outstanding events, a Country Fair, Food Show and Fall Fashion Show, had been scheduled for presentation during September and October and we are glad to announce that both were engineered in a most showmanlike manner.

The Country Fair and Food Show represented an old-time country fair in a modern setting. An entire section of the neighborhood, extending for several blocks, was decorated in true holiday fashion. The streets were arched with thousands of pennants, flags and bunting, draped between the archways.

The food show consisted of a large number of booths in which were displayed the product of many nationally known manufacturers. All modern conveniences, such as electric refrigerators, electric sewing machines, radios, etc., were on exhibition with attendants on hand to impart desired information.

Additional outdoor attractions consisted of a pony track with eight ponies to amuse the youngsters; dog shows for the homeliest, biggest, smallest, best bred, most playful, best behaved and best trained dogs; doll parades for the girls, in which prizes were awarded for the largest, smallest, prettiest, cutest, funniest, most stylish and most complete doll outfits; pie and cake baking contests for the mothers and daughters, and a number of other stunts which reflected the true atmosphere of a country fair. Even a daredevil bicycle rider performed his breath-taking stunt of hurtling down an improvised incline through hoops. Last but not least was the Baby Show, one of the big events of the week. Crowds jammed the sidewalks to witness the parade of babies of every shape, size and variety. While the parents cheered their favorites, the judges exercised their privilege and the winners were announcd at the theatre the same afternoon.

Turning attention to the Fashion Show, more than a dozen prominent merchants of the community were represented when this event was staged. The last word from Paris in gowns, coats, furs, lingerie, pajamas, footwear, hats, pocketbooks and other articles attractive to the feminine eye, were deftly demonstrated by a number of comely models. The services of a five-piece orchestra were also obtained to add color to the occasion and the stage was bedecked with flowers. To sum it all up, the North Philadelphia Fashion Show was a huge success.

We are not able to present any photos of the fashion show, but on this page there are two shots made during the country fair and food show, both showing views of the popular baby parade. Another point we want to bring out is that it is very difficult to dodge the subject of Sablosky's Tab Newspaper, which he edits and circulates all through his section of the city. This is so closely entwined with the policies of the Erlen and all its activities, at the same time being a successful community paper, that we're going to take time off very soon and tell you all about it. In the meantime, we extend appreciation to this live showman for sending along evidence of what's he's been doing down his way and hope that he will continue to keep in touch with this Club.

Myron McLeod Found Adventure Club Was Boost For A Serial

When casting about for a means of building up a clientele for a series of 12 African adventure shorts, Myron C. McLeod, manager of the Patricia Theatre, Powell River, B. C., hit upon the idea of issuing "African Adventurer Club" cards and announcing that everyone who attended the first number in the series would be made a member of the club. Members were also advised that all who showed by their cards that they had attended the entire series of the picture would be granted free admission for two on the Saturday following conclusion of the series.

The above gag worked so well in keeping interest alive on the African films that McLeod has installed the club as a permanent feature of the theatre. Other members of this Club have made somewhat similar moves to boost attendance on serials and this will serve as a reminder that it has generally proven an effective box-office aid.

ROUND TABLE BIOGRAPHIES

It all goes to show what can be accomplished if a fellow sticks to his job.

Take Steve Bennis, for instance. Steve began a career in the business of entertaining folk 22 years ago, with illustrated songs and one-reel features; today he's the owner-operator of the Lincoln and Grand Theatres in Lincoln, Ill.

Steve Bennis

'Course, Steve was born in Greece, and that means something; to be exact, he was born on May 22, 1882. He received his education in public schools of his native country and when he arrived in the U. S. A. he managed to find time during his evenings to attend night school.

He candidly asserts that he chose showbusiness for a career to make money, but that if he had to start all over again he would pick the same field. He was 27 years old when he made up his mind to become a showman, and step by step he made his way until he's now sitting rather pretty; don't you think?

Steve is quite active among local fraternal organizations, being a Grand Knight of the K. of C. a member of the Elks and Kiwanis, and an active director of the Chamber of Commerce. He's married and up to this writing is the father of five children.

Holden Presenting Safety Club Shows With Fine Results

The subject of Safety Clubs has been touched upon by this department at various times and certain angles relating to theatre exploitation have been set forth as extensively as the subject matter would permit. As near as we can recall, these dealt principally with minor phases, such as tying in the safety angle with regular morning matinees for children for which admission was charged. However, it has remained for Earle Holden, city manager for E. J. Sparks-Publix houses in Ocala, Fla., to bring to our attention the promotion of one of these clubs, and its attending program, at no cost to the theatre.

The Local Situation

The population of Ocala did not warrant the organization of a kiddies' club in view of the fact that the existing 10-cent rate at two of the houses was a pretty fair stimulant in this direction. But Holden discovered that the local Chamber of Commerce was working along safety lines and approached this body with the idea of offering a free show at one of the theatres one Saturday morning in each month. Special films, relating to safety for children and others, were to be featured during the performances and when the business men heartily endorsed his suggestion the success of the move was practically assured, with the exception of how to secure the necessary pictures.

Secured Films Gratis

Right off the reel, Paramount co-operated to the extent of furnishing gratis a two-reel comedy and a cartoon for the program and the safety films were secured free of charge from the Department of Agriculture in Washington, D. C., and the Y. M. C. A. Motion Picture Bureau in New York City. (There are many other sources.) Two of these were booked for the first show, making a total of five reels. The program started with a safety reel and was followed by a comedy; then, another safety picture and the show was closed with the cartoon—an ending that delighted the children.

C. of C. Co-operation

Representatives from the Chamber of Commerce were closely associated with the entire scheme. In advance of the scheduled morning performance, the two safety reels were privately screened for two members of the body so that during the regular show these men could deliver a three-minute talk along the lines of thought contained in the films on the program. One week in advance of the show, other members of the C. of C. working in pairs, visited each school in the county and extended an invitation to all students to attend the showing.

His Move Justified

Many theatre managers who are running kiddie clubs will wonder where Holden gets off to promote shows that do not bring any cash returns to the theatre, but we think you will all agree that certain localities justify a move of this nature and that there also is considerable to be gained.

In the first place, no manager can laugh off good will from a Chamber of Commerce, to the extent of having it feel that the theatre is always ready to do its share for the betterment of the community. Then there is additional good will created among the parents of the many children, also proving to them that the theatre occupies a definite and constructive place in community welfare. The shows also brought in children from the country, who, otherwise, would not have come in, and served to familiarize them with Sparks theatres and helped to form the theatre-attending habit.

Additional Value

The value of such a club is also seen in the extensive co-operation given the move by the local newspapers, which gave unlimited support to playing up the safety programs. There was also the word-of-mouth advertising through the schools when the Chamber of Commerce members visited these institutions to stress the point that the shows were arranged through the courtesy of the theatre.

To sum it all up, profit to the theatre was not only reflected as outlined above, but there actually existed a box office return, when taking into consideration the fact that many of the children brought to the city to view the safety show remained over to pay admission for the theatre's regular program.

Box Office Potentiality

The whole scheme was more or less of an experiment as far as Holden was concerned when it was first started, but the success of the initial safety show demonstrated its vast possibilities as a potential box-office influence. It made a big hit with the children, pleased the Chamber of Commerce and school officials and was a means of impressing a large number of citizens with the theatre's standing as an important educational unit. At this writing it is felt that an additional show will have to be provided to take care of the many children who plan to attend the next meeting of the Safety Club. As a matter of fact, there is no telling just how a move of this kind will eventually turn out, for there will be many off-shoots that will merit individual attention.

You Can't Lose!

One thing is certain, however, and that is that there is nothing to be lost and much to be gained by any theatre manager who may be in a position to try out a similar scheme. To any one who may contemplate such a move, it would be well to keep in mind what prompted Holden to try it out. Ocala was not large enough to warrant the promotion of a regular kiddies' club; the theatres were getting a fair amount of patronage from kids; hence, it was necessary to work along different lines.

Real Neth Splurged With Page Ads When Announcing Book'gs

One of the recent examples of outstanding institutional advertising can be chalked up to the credit of J. Real Neth, owner of the Neth Theatres, the Grand, State, Eastern, Clinton and Cameo in Columbus, Ohio. He took an entire page in the Columbus papers to announce his late October and early November bookings, heading his splurge with the display line across the page, "Here's the Kick-Off." The center of the page was given to "Five Star Final" and flanking this were announcements of the other coming attractions.

True, it cost Neth some coin of the realm to pull this stunt, but he had faith in his bookings and early results proved that the splurge was good business. His five theatres all did lively trade and so we're passing along the idea for other showmen to try out if conditions should warrant making a move of this kind. Neth is a keen showman and while accounts of his work have not been seen among the Club pages for some time, we hope that he will see this little story and that it will remind him that we want to hear more about his show-selling activities.

Wallace Nordby Is Turning Out Many Effective Programs

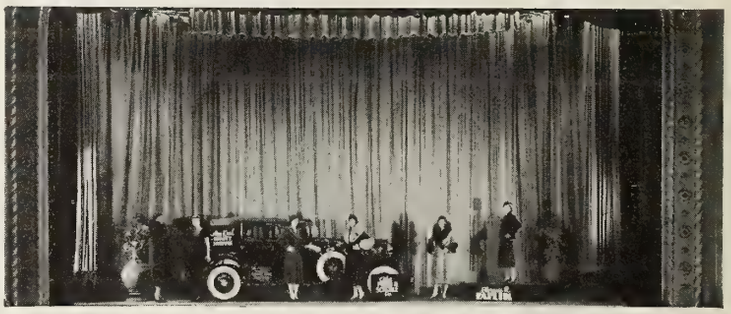
Among other important details in the management of the Ritz and Indiana Theatres, Indiana, Pa., considerable stress is laid on the turning out of attractive programs.

We have before us several copies of programs edited by Manager Wallace Nordby and published at no cost to the theatre. The weekly edition runs an average of 14 pages and each is bound with an attractive lithographed cover put out by one of the leading program companies. About 5,000 of these are distributed to patrons a week previous to date on cover by a uniformed program boy in lobby of the theatre.

Two other samples of souvenir programs serve to illustrate that there is considerable source of revenue in the publishing of these when the occasion arises for such an issue. Last fall when the Ritz was redecorated one of these yielded a clean-up of $400 for the house. It was very nicely gotten up and in addition to a well scattered assortment of ads contained photos and biographies of every member of the staff, from the general manager down to the porter. When the reader comes to the end of such a booklet one is very apt to have formed the impression that the Ritz is considerable of an institution. On the occasion of the opening of the New Roland Theatre in Phillipsburg, Pa., Nordby issued another souvenir program on which the house made over $200 clear profit from the ads.

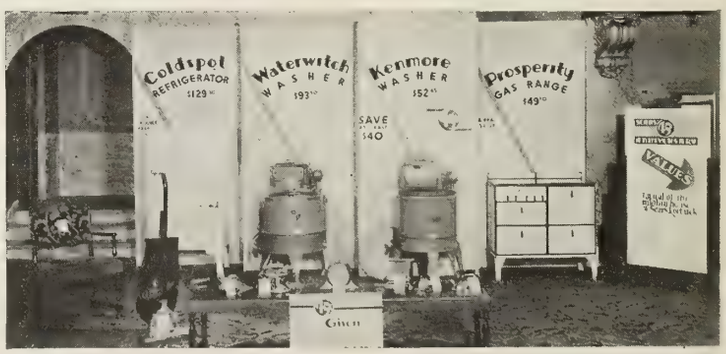
The photo on this page shows a float designed by Nordby and his associates which took first prize in a local Fourth of July celebration. It was quite an ornate affair and was apparently designed to represent several sets in the making of a motion picture. The boys in uniform are the Ritz ushers in summer costume, and in the center you will see the program boy we've already mentioned. The total cost of the entire float, including lumber, material and costumes amounted to $175.

We have also had occasion to glance at several ads prepared by Nordby and note that he touches up most of them by means of a special ink and speed ball pen. By means of these some unusual effects in letters and design are gained when applied to etching in the name of theatre and playdates. All required is the ink, pen and some regular bristol cardboard and he tells us that he will be glad to supply further information to Club headquarters if any other member is interested.



Nordby began his theatre career in '24 as an usher in the Indiana Theatre when this house opened and today he is the manager of the Indiana Amusement Company. He owns a partnership in both Indiana and Ritz and in addition an interest in the Roland Theatre in Phillipsburg, Pa. Taking care of three theatres is a big job for any one man, but we will hope that he will find time to contribute some more ideas to this Club.

Lamm Staged Series Of Fashion Revues; Also Important Tie



That enterprising showman Julius Lamm, manager of the Variety Theatre in Cleveland, Ohio, of whom you've often had occasion to read about in this department, does things in a big way out in his town. For instance, when the idea strikes him on fashion shows, he holds a series of three; when he ties up with a firm for give-aways, he lines up an outfit such as the Sears-Roebuck Company.

One of the photos on this page will show how the Variety's stage was set for the holding of one of the three fashion shows. The new auto in center of the stage was promoted for the occasion from a local dealer. These shows are promoted among the neighborhood merchants and are held every Wednesday for three consecutive weeks. About 15 minutes is devoted to each affair, during which time the patrons are shown all the latest frills in dress for the coming season.

There are several hundred dollars worth of articles represented in the photo of the Sears-Roebuck exhibit at the theatre, consisting of merchandise any person would be proud to possess. The display, advertising and publicity was all paid for by the merchant and was put over on the strength of the firm's 45th Anniversary. Taking for granted that all readers are familiar with the way these give-aways are handled, we will not go into any detail concerning this end of the deal.

It is also noted that Lamm is not neglecting the Variety's Kiddie Club, last Hallowe'en being the occasion for a big stage party consisting of games, contests and a prize costume affair for the funniest, best dressed and most unique make-ups. During one of the recent matinees the kids gained admission by bringing two mason jars to the theatre, 600 of these being collected for a "Save the Surplus" drive that was conducted in Cleveland. The papers gave this stunt a nice write-up.

This Round Tabler's activities are always interesting to note and particular attention is called to the success he had with his series of Fall Fashion Shows. The idea of staging three of them over a period and not allotting too much time for them on the program, would appear to be a unique method of putting a stunt of this kind over. In addition, it would seem that all concerned would receive a greater benefit, both in publicity and actual returns.

Larry Woodin Tells Secret Of Two-For-One Complimentaries

Several weeks ago when passing along some information on how Larry Woodin sells his shows at the Arcadia Theatre in Wellsboro, Pa., among other things we mentioned that he had a method of making his complimentary tickets do the work of two-for-ones. This subject was not dealt with at that time for reason that detailed information was lacking. Since then Woodin has been deluged with letters from Round Tablers requesting that they be let in on the plan and so he has sent along the dope for broadcasting by this department. The success of the stunt is based entirely upon distribution and a follow-up of the recipient of the ticket. There is no trick copy, as several were wont to believe.

Exacting Conditions

To begin with, his theatre is located in a town of 4,000 population and has a seating capacity of 900. Thus, it will be seen that the house must be strongly exploited in surrounding territory to keep the seats filled. His first move, when assuming charge of the Arcadia, was to sell the idea it was the finest theatre within a radius of 40 miles. When this had firmly taken root, he began to use complimentaries for all advertising placed outside as well as inside the town. He personally distributed these and at the same time carefully sized up each person to whom the tickets were given.

A Very Clubby Idea

If the person receiving the ticket owned a car, he was sold the idea of bringing along a load of his friends. He had his own tickets, his friends would probably buy theirs and also supply gasoline for the trip. The man was checked at the theatre and if he happened to come alone, he was asked why he had not brought So-and-So along. In fact, Woodin has often suggested that some particular person be brought next time and, believe it or not, the people he mentioned would show up. A point was made of asking how the show was enjoyed and this was further discussed the following week when other advertising was distributed.

The Old Army Game

If the person receiving the ticket continued to be delinquent in the matter of bringing in friends and happened to be a local fan, he was jokingly threatened with withdrawal of his privilege unless the theatre reaped some benefit. It has been found that this type of person will usually take the hint seriously and start bringing in some pay customers.

His advertising complimentaries are not figured by the number of sheets of advertising that goes out as too many are wasted. A happy medium is gained by spotting the advertising in such a way that the man next door will ask for some in his window. As a matter of fact, he has a waiting list of people only too glad to donate advertising space and when he finds a privilege being abused, it is passed along to someone else with the understanding that it will be appreciated. This is shown by boosting the theatre and bringing additional business.

No Faith in Outsiders

As far as handing over paper and passes to bill-posters and letting them go ahead on their own responsibility, Woodin thinks the tickets might as well be thrown away. What does get properly placed obtains certain returns but the net result is not worth the passes. He likens the handing out of a complimentary to a business concern's demonstration of some new product or the advertising of a trial offer, and believes that the transaction should receive a like amount of attention. He states that it might be interesting to many to sit in his office on a Monday when, due to some cause, advertising for the week became delayed. Long distance calls come in asking for the matter, proof that the advertiser takes interest in and appreciates his complimentary privilege.

Personal Contact The Answer

Lest the idea be obtained that Woodin is handing around an undue quantity of passes, let us correct this impression. He doesn't give out very many, but those given out are handled in such a way that the passes really act as two-for-ones through his personal contact system. Calling personally on every person who advertises for him, is one of his hobbies. He makes them feel that they have an interest in the advertising that is placed and instills the idea that if business is not good, they will lose the privilege.

And so there you are, Round Tablers, those of you who asked how Woodin made his complimentaries bring in additional business. There's no trick to it but being on the job when advertising is placed and there can be no doubt that his system brings returns. He has sold the idea that the store-keepers, etc., are receiving a distinct privilege and not just another fellow getting something for nothing. Instead of letting a pass appear as something promiscuously distributed by a theatre and letting the impression creep in that it doesn't amount to anything much, theatre and privilege are sold in such a way to reflect nothing but credit to the institution.

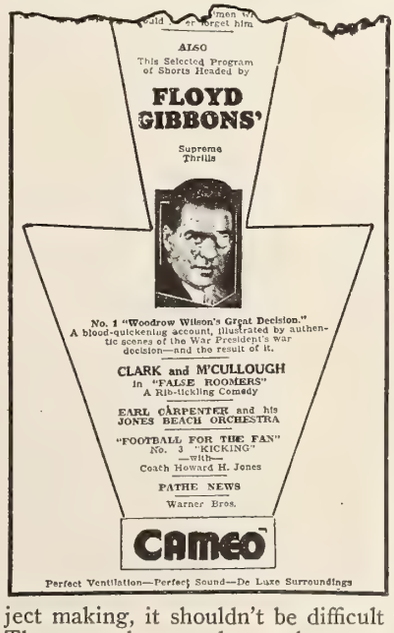
BENEFIT SHOWS ARE PROFITABLE!

Many local organizations and various other groups can be interested in benefit shows at your theatre. It represents one of the few ways they have to raise funds or replenish their treasuries.

Contact them and offer to tie up with them for a special benefit performance. Specify the particular nights when you can generally stand plenty of extra business. Let them have a voice in the selection of the picture to be shown. But after getting them lined up, be sure that the entire understanding is put in writing and signed by the organization and yourself.

Points to be stressed are: percentage the organization gets according to the number of tickets sold. This can be on a sliding scale; the more tickets sold the larger the percentage. You both benefit by this method.



Settlement must be effected twenty-four hours (or any other time you select) before the show. All monies must be accounted for and the theatre advised how many tickets have been actually sold. If possible make your deal read so that you cut in on every ticket sold and not just for those presented at the box office.

Method of selling tickets. This must be clearly understood by all parties. No selling is allowed within a certain distance of the theatre or on the streets. Sale must be confined to personal distribution by members of the organization participating and not in any way that will hurt the theatre's usual business. Naturally, you will expect such benefit shows to bring out patronage that are not regular attendants at your theatre.

Go over each point carefully and have the benefit agreement forms typed out in advance so that each show is run along the same lines. Copies of such forms are available upon request from Club headquarters.

PROFITABLE TO PLUG SHORTS!

As evidence that short subjects are given a strong plug at the Cameo Theatre in Bridgeport, Conn., take a look at the accompanying reproduction of an ad gotten out by Edgar Lynch, manager of that house. It repersents a half portion of an ad that measured approximately 14 x 4½ inches so you can judge for yourselves that he is giving his shorts an equal break with the feature, at least on this occasion. In case you cannot read the small type, the program is headed by one of Floyd Gibbons' "Supreme Thrills" and followed by a Clark and McCulloch comedy, an Earl Carpenter Orchestra number, "Football for the Fan" and a Pathe News.

Many exhibitors stress the value of the short subject end of their programs in newspaper advertising and have found that this has reflected advantageously at the box-office. Lynch has apparently also found that it has paid him for the above is by no means an isolated instance of giving the short a plug. Of course, it's necessary to have something to plug but in these days of smart short subject making, it shouldn't be difficult to line up a strong assortment. Then spot them so that a glance at your ad will give them a break.

BERNARD N. BISBEE has his time well occupied with the job of assisting with the management of the Lyric and Nile Theatres in New Ulm, Minn., and also looking after advertising for both of these houses. However, now that he has become a Round Tabler we'll expect him to take off enough time to let us all know his part in sending these two houses over the top. A glance at one of his special heralds shows that he has some original ideas in advertising and we want to see other examples of his work.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

WILLIAM E. HARTNETT is in charge of the Gorman theatre in Framingham, Mass., and the Club welcome is also extended to this new Round Tabler. He's another Publix man to join up with the livest aggregation of showmen in the world and we will look forward to his contributions to the art of selling shows. Shoot along some ideas, "Bill," and we'll broadcast them.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

HAROLD M. WRIGHT is at the helm of the State Theatre in Hollister, Calif., a house belonging to the Golden State Theatre circuit. His name will be familiar to many showmen out along the West Coast and now that he's a Round Tabler you may expect to become even better acquainted with this Club member for reason that he intends to make some interesting contributions to this department.

CARTER BARRON manages the Fox Theatre in Atlanta, Ga., and is sponsored for membership in this organization by Lionel Keene, a well known Round Tabler. We are very glad to have Barron for one of the Club's representatives in this live Southern city and will look forward with interest to his forthcoming contributions.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

WILLIAM C. McCREARY is located out in Hibbing, Minn., where he manages the State Theatre, a Publix house devoted to straight picture policy. He has been interested in this department for a long time and now that he has become a member will henceforth swap some of his show-selling stunts with other Round Tablers. Let's go, Bill, we're ready whenever you are.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

CHARLES A. ZINN is at the helm of the Uptown Theatre in Minneapolis, Minn., a 1,200-seat Public house using one change weekly on second run. His name is a familiar one in theatre circles of the Middle West and other points and it's a pleasure to add his name to this ever-increasing army of showmen. He does not have a whole lot of spare time on his hands, due to the fact that this is taken up getting out a community paper. However, he and his associates have promised to make contributions to this department just as often as possible and he may rest assured that we'll be glad to hear from him.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

MIKE GUTTMAN manages the Lyric Theatre in Watertown, S. Dak., and we're also glad to extend the Club welcome to this newest member from his section of the country. His house is one of Publix-N. W. Theatres and now that he's one of the gang he'll have an excellent opportunity to keep in touch with the many other Publix men in this organization. Guttman is a veteran showman, having been in the stock end of show-business since 1924. He only entered picture exhibition about a year ago, but he's in the game with both feet and the Club will be in line for some interesting show-tips from this Round Tabler.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

DAN N. CARTER holds forth down in Carthage, N. C., where he owns and operates the Playhouse Theatre. Dan hasn't any strings attached to him except the business of keeping his house in the black and so we'll expect him to take enough time off in the near future and pen the Club an account of how he sells his shows. Glad to have you with us, Dan, and don't forget to keep your fellow managers posted on your activities.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

W. M. TROXEL is at the helm of the Moon Theatre in Wilbur, Neb., and we're mighty glad to introduce this new member to his host of fellow showmen in this organization. We know that he has found these pages helpful and interesting and that he will now do his part in the task of keeping them that way by contributing some of his own show-selling ideas.

RUSSELL WEAVER assists Leon R. Shafer with the management of the Riviera Theatre in Rochester, N. Y., and his name is also listed as a member of this Club. Prior to going with Shafer, Weaver worked with Ed May at the Riviera Theatre in Rochester as doorman and his present job is a promotion. His boss states that he's right on his toes all of the time and that it probably will not be long before he'll be stepping out for himself.

J. C. Jenkins—His Colyum

Newport, Ore.

DEAR HERALD:

Rain, rain, rain. Ever since we crossed the Cascades three weeks ago the sun seems to have abandoned this Pacific coast country and the moss is beginning to sprout on our back. When we got to Seattle the boys said, "It's too bad, Colonel, that you didn't get here a couple of weeks sooner, we have been having the most delightful weather," and we said "Oh, yeah." Then when we got to Olympia the boys said, "It's too bad, Colonel, that you didn't get here a couple of weeks sooner, we have been having the loveliest weather," and we said "Oh, yeah." Then when we got to Portland our niece said, "It's too bad, Uncle Jack, that you didn't get here a couple of weeks sooner for the weather was simply delightful," and we said "Oh, yeah," and now the Lord only knows what they will say when we get down to Hollywood, but it is likely they will say, "This weather is very unusual." We like rain but we don't care very much for a flood. Out here they have nine months drouth and three months rain, the balance of the year they say is "delightful," but it's a great country nevertheless and you couldn't dog these Oregonians away from it.

In an editorial in a Chicago daily entitled "West of the Mississippi," the editor sings a swan song in the following language:

"These regions are eccentric because they do not know what the United States of America is all about. They go prohibition in one direction and farm board in another. They seek to express their local habits and their religious dogmas in the federal statutes and to rely upon the federal treasury for their needs. They have no innate restraints rooted in an understanding of the constitutional government in the United States."

Yeah, in other words, the country west of the Mississippi is inhabited by "wild jackasses" as Senator Moses said, but thank God the country "west of the Mississippi" has no Al Capones and Legs Diamonds to contend with that might seem to make it necessary that the country be placed under martial law. Maine started prohibition and there are no two states that have burried their arms deeper in the federal treasury than Illinois and Pennsylvania. West of the Mississippi they give people a fair trial by law before they hang them and every citizen can repeat the "Golden Rule" backwards.

It is reported that a nudist colony has established itself in Carmel, Cal., and that swarms of airplanes from Los Angeles are circling the village every day. It looks like Hollywood might have some competition.

At Longview, Wash., the other day we saw the largest sawmill in the world, owned and operated by the Long-Bell Lumber company. When a log starts through that mill it hardly hesitates until it reaches the finished product stage in one form or another. Even the bark and sawdust is conveyed back to the furnaces and there is nothing wasted. There is enough lumber stored in that mill to build a good sized city. Logs that are seven feet in diameter and forty feet long are handled by the machinery as easily as though they were toothpicks. It's worth driving miles to see this mill in operation.

This town of Newport is right on the banks of the Pacific ocean, or rather on the bluffs. We can look out of our window and see the breakers rolling in thirty or forty feet high and the noise they make would almost drown out a Democratic convention. The guy who discovered this pond and named it the Pacific ocean was full of Spanish garlic, for if there is anything peaceful about it we have failed to discover it.

Every town has some historic spot around which there is some legend. Newport has an historic spot called "Jump Off Joe." It is a high point that sticks out over the beach and is several hundred feet high and the legend is that an Indian maiden and her lover Joe were having a necking party on this point when Joe's enemy was seen sneaking up on him with a butcherknife and the girl hollered to him "Jump off, Joe," and it is said that Joe jumped off but there seems to be no record as to what happened to Joe. Our guess is that that gal framed up on Joe; they do that a lot of times, that's the reason why you can't trust these gals.

We met two very delightful people here in Newport, Mr. and Mrs. W. A. McKevitt who operate the Midway theatre. Mr. McKevitt has been in the theatre business here for some time and was formerly connected with the business as a musician in Pocatello, Idaho. We were a guest at their theatre tonight and witnessed a showing of "The Millionaire" with George Arliss, which was a very delightful picture. Mr. McKevitt reports business very slow with no prospects of much improvement. This town is largely a resort town, and, like all other resort towns, it is affected materially by the depression.

When we went through Oregon two years ago we had a hunch that we were missing something by not going around by McMinnville. Now we know we did, for when we called on W. M. Mattecheck of the Lark theatre he gave us such a welcome that we have been ashamed of ourself for passing him up before. He said that when he learned that we were in Salem and didn't come around to call on him at McMinnville he wanted to shoot us the first opportunity he had.

So What!

We are informed in all seriousness, as the result of a recent radio tube survey, that the radio-listening public is daily the loser of millions of hours of broadcasting at great cost to both public and advertising sponsors of programs. Here's why: of the 10,000,000 a.c. receiving sets in the country, many still use the slow acting tubes, which means that 30 seconds must elapse before the set begins to sputter. Quick acting tubes require seven seconds, we are told. That lost 23 seconds of waiting time amounts daily to 64,000 hours if the sets are turned on but once a day. In man hours, believe it or not, the loss equals man-time enough to keep 100 men busy for three months, and at the chain broadcasting rate, radio program sponsors should lose over 100 billion dollars every day to pay for the lost heating time. Yes, but what of it?

The Lark theatre is all one would expect to find in a town the size of McMinnville, in fact, it is rather ahead of the procession and we judge that under Mr. Mattecheck's management it is the most popular spot in the town. He also reports business dull with little hope of immediate improvement although he says he is getting by, which he considers not so bad when measured by other lines of business. We are very much pleased that we found Mr. Mattecheck at home.

Mr. McKevitt went over to Toledo with us to call on Miss Verne Ross, who operates the Ross theatre at that place. We have heard it said that "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes"; not being a gentleman we can't vouch for that statement, but after seeing Miss Ross we are inclined to think that if they have any sense they do. Miss Ross has been a long time in the business and her experience dates back to the days of John Bunny and Flora Finch, Alkali Ike and G. M. Anderson, and you will agree that is going some distance back. We had a delightful visit with Miss Ross and we see what we might have missed by passing up Toledo. She is 100 per cent for MOTION PICTURE HERALD and no further evidence is needed to prove that she is a lady of judgment. The film business would be a whole lot better off with more exhibitors like Miss Ross.

Toledo is a mill town. It is claimed that the largest exclusive spruce sawmill on the Pacific coast is located here. Just now this mill is operating on one quarter time and this makes business rather slow. This spruce mill was one of the mills taken over by the government during the war to get out spruce to make airplane propellers, which is another instance of saddling a lot of needless expense on the people, because this mill was, and is, able to saw enough spruce in a week to make all the propellers there are in the world and those that will be needed for a generation to come. This goes to prove that when war breaks out, people become panicky and lose their heads. War broke out with us once when a redheaded gyhookas took our girl home from spelling school one night and the next day our mother had to patch our pants and buy us a new shirt so we could go back to school. It never pays to get panicky.

Every state has something to brag about. Oregon claims to have the largest elephant in the world. He is said to weigh ten tons and his name is Tusko. Not long ago when Tusko was in Seattle he took a notion to go out on a sightseeing tour and he wandered into a farmer's yard and out to his barn. When he got to the barn he smelled something that aroused his curiosity so he walked in and helped himself to a couple of barrels of mash that the farmer had for domestic purposes and after that mash got to working on Tusko he decided to put on a whoopee party all by himself, and when the farmer came out and saw his barn being scattered all over the landscape he wondered if he was seeing things, for Tusko was slinging rafters and boards in every direction and then he would stand up on his hind legs and then stand on his head and seemed to be having the time of his life. It is quite evident that Tusko doesn't subscribe to the Eighteenth Amendment. Portland claims to have a whale that was captured in the Willamete river a few weeks ago, and there is nothing left for us to do now but to send for Elmer Gailey of Wayne, Neb., to uphold the reputation of our beloved state. Today we saw the sun for three minutes but we got soaked to the hide before we could get back in the house.

Hurrah for Oregon!

VOICE OF THE INDUSTRY

REFERRING TO YOUR ARTICLE IN your last issue on double billing, I am giving you a few reasons why double billing is a ruinous practice, as I have found in operating hundreds of theatres of all types.

What poison does to the body, double billing does to the theatre.

The downtown theatres are all starving and ready to turn the theatres over for the obligations they owe, all due to double billing.

It cuts the gross in half because people are overfed with pictures, seeing two features for the price of one.

Patrons who have to sit through an ordinary picture waiting to see the feature they really come in for, fall asleep waiting.

Ninety-five per cent of the exhibitors are forced to go double bill because they are afraid the competition is getting all of the business.

Large chain operators have lost their nerve and are afraid to take the lead and stop the doubling. Distributors are afraid they may lose a few dollars and haven't the foresight to see that, indirectly, they are ruining their business.

Zones are created to protect the first-run, but the distributor overlooks the fact that double billing is ruining the first-runs.

No one selling advertised brands in other lines would tolerate the kind of competition that is permitted in the show business.

Double billing does not stimulate theatre business, but rather cheapens it.

The public is told indirectly that the single picture is not good enough to stand alone. It gives the people an overdose of amusement which keeps them away oftener, rather than bringing them back.

It forces film rentals down and encourages cheaper product.

Unless the leaders of our industry act quickly, you will see the beginning of the end for thousands of theatres, and a new type of amusement taking their places.

The downtown theatres in Los Angeles, with the millions invested, are in a dangerous condition due to double billing.

Men that advocate double billing are not practical showmen and are blind to the effect it will have on their business for the future.

This very important problem needs leadership and foresight. Who will take the lead?—J. J. Franklin, Franklin Theatres, Los Angeles, Cal.

A Merchandise Contract

WE FEEL THAT IN FAIRNESS TO other exhibitors the publication of the following incident is worthy of space donated by you.

Several weeks ago a salesman representing himself as connected with the Gillette Safety Razor Company, the Barr Rubber Company of Sandusky, Ohio, the Eastman Kodak company of Buffalo, New York, the Underwood Flashlight Company and several other concerns of lesser importance approached us with a proposition to distribute their merchandise gratis for the advertising they would receive from same. He told how Eastman gave away 100,000 cameras free last year for the revenue he would later derive from films the user might purchase and said that this year these concerns had all gotten together to give their merchandise away through the theatres.

The plan as outlined by him cost the theatre absolutely nothing after 10 per cent of the free coupons (to be given away by the theatres) had been redeemed. The patrons of the theatres were to save these coupons and when they had received 50, mail same to any of these associated concerns and receive free either a shaving set, a camera, a flashlight or other merchandise as outlined.

We signed a contract agreeing to distribute this free merchandise. We decided that 25,000 coupons would be sufficient and agreed to pay $4.50 per thousand for same with the written understanding that this money would be refunded when the goods were distributed, and 15 per cent of the coupons redeemed. As proof of good faith, we gave the salesman a check for $25 which he immediately had certified at the bank.

Upon receipt of the first shipment of coupons and goods, we find that the deal as represented by the salesman and what we received are two totally different affairs. The free gratis merchandise just isn't and the coupons are no good to the customers unless they purchase additional merchandise from the different concerns.

Several others, exhibitors also, signed contracts and law suits are now being arranged against the concern who does business under the name of the Manufacturers' Products, Inc., of Detroit, Mich.

The only place this information appears about the necessity of the patrons purchasing merchandise in order to redeem the coupons is on the reverse side of the sample coupons, which he has stuck into his book.

Trusting that your publishing of this incident will save other exhibitors from losing money as we have.—Langdon R. Barhydt, B. and K. Enterprises, The New Franklin Theatre, Springfield, Mass.

Jaysee "Rings the Bell"

I HAVE JUST READ J. C. JENKINS IN the issue of this week and again this chap that seems so closely in touch with the business rings the bell with his criticisms of titles.

I wish J. C. would sit in the New York offices of some of these producers and give them his good common sense advice about this proposition of titles.

They not only seem to be running out of titles; they are not getting any new stories. We have had picture after picture that did not vary in treatment very much from many others.

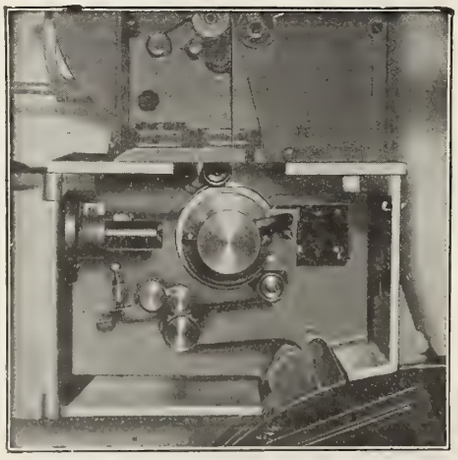
What he says is true, that when you get a good picture they will spend their money but those pictures have been all too few and far between this year.

Just about one in five are hitting and the batting average is behind 1930 so far this season, and, from what are apparently in the offing, I cannot see much prospect for any improvement.

Something wrong somewhere, and that something is not all depression. It is the inability of the producers to get the pictures that will hit. The public are picking them this year as they never have before in my experience of twelve years on this corner. More power to J. C. He tells 'em as he sees them.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind.

Rita C. McGoldrick Service

VERY BEST WISHES FOR THE HERALD, and by the way, I wish to mention the service your good friend Mrs. McGoldrick is rendering through your paper. She and I agree pretty well as to the morals of pictures. I have been keeping a keen watch on her work, and am booking my Friday and Saturday shows through her comments.—W. W. Landers, manager, Landers Theatre, Batesville, Ark.



On the Darrow Picture

I AM NOW SHOWING "MYSTERY OF Life," produced to give Clarence Darrow the opportunity to talk on Evolution, and while it is a marvelous work fit for any pre-medic. college course, I cannot understand why any distributing company would go out and sell this picture to theatres. It is very, very misleading, as it is nothing more than a laboratory explanation of tests made in University zoology, and the motion picture public will not tolerate this rendition. We did a large advertising campaign thinking that here was a novelty film that would lend itself to intensive selling. It did bring the business but with it came dissatisfied customers. As I write this a little girl comes from the audience and drops into my office, and this is what she says, "Say, is this the mystery of life or is it just somebody talking?"—Will Brenner, Manager, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind.

SOUND REPRODUCTION

The BLUEBOOK School

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 107—Of what main elements does the RCA sound amplifying system consist? (B) May all systems of sound recording (35mm.) be reproduced and projected on RCA equipment? (C) Tell us, so far as you are able, the chief points of difference as between WE and RCA equipment.

Answer to First Question No. 102

The first Bluebook question No. 102, which was: (A) What is the critical frequency of the motor control tuned circuit? (B) Tell us why the motor will pick up speed in the usual manner. (C) What kind of motor is the driving motor? (D) When is the speed of a D.C. motor increased or decreased? These questions have their base in the W.E. motor control box tuned circuit.

The following made acceptable answers: Lester Borst, Lester Van Buskirk, George Thompson, Chas. L. Goldman, Leroy Bates, Henry Edwards, T. L. Oleson, Wm. D. Hotaling, Bob Taylor, D. T. Wylie, D. H. Prinley, George Richards, Dave Daniels, Larry Tipton, N. D. Garling, Frank Burker, Bill Doe, Thos. McGruder, H. D. Cole, H. T. Jones, Ben H. Robbins, Lon Jeckson, Peter Cermack, Seymour Carroll, J. D. Orlander, Peter M. Davis, James McGuire, P. R. Findley, John Truax, Andy L. Unger, W. D. Samuels, Wm. Bogart, G. L. Doe, Tom Atterbury, Frank F. Famaer, James Lidding, George Porder, T. B. Kay, John Dagg, Tom D. Cermack, Dan Singer, Frank S. Roberts, F. T. Leroy, James Hendershot, Bob Danning, H. T. Goldfarb, H. T. Jones, Dave Sanger, P. R. Simons, K. I. Romd, Frank Oliver, H. D. Schofield, L. Mooring, Tom Habler, J. L. Sanderson, F. L. Kaufman, Dan Jones, Tom H. Gordon, D. L. Williams, P. G. Carnakis, Dan K. Hammitt and Charles L. Goldman.

I have selected the answer of Lester Van Buskirk for publication. He says:

"(A) The Western Electric D.C. driving motor or the A.C. driving motor for projectors, the critical frequency is seven hundred twenty cycles (720 cycles).

"(B) Your 'tuned circuit' is set at seven hundred twenty cycles per second. When starting your motor it will pick up speed, also your small generator is picking up more cycles per second. When the motor reaches twelve hundred R.P.M. your generator is turning out seven hundred twenty cycles per second, letting it pass through the 'tuned circuit,' and this affects the control circuit of the motor so that there will be no further increase in speed.

"(C) There are two kinds of motors, one is for D.C. current, the other for A.C. current. The D.C. motor is a compound wound of the regular type and has a special speed regulating winding. The A.C. motor is the repulsion type; this motor has two windings, the stator winding and the rotor winding.

"(D) The speed of the D.C. motor is increased when the field current is weakened and decreases when it is strengthened."

On a separate sheet brother Van Buskirk says:

"That Kansas City, Mo., projectionist who thinks there are no perfect answers to the questions you ask should buy a Volume Three of the Richardson handbook of projection, turn to page 1041 and read that small saying at the bottom of the page. It fits that projectionist well."

SHARON—NEW CASTLE

The drive from Williamsport to New Castle is charming, though we were disappointed by the fact that the first 60 miles were almost entirely blotted out by impenetrable fog. The roads are excellent.

At Butler, we stopped for a few minutes at one of the theatres (unfortunately I do not sense its name) and found that the men of that city intended to be present at the meeting in New Castle.

Projectionists' local 451 covers both Sharon and New Castle, the two cities being about 30 miles apart. The meeting was to be held in New Castle, because there are five theatres in that city and only three are in Sharon—that is to say, there are eight theatres in New Castle and five in Sharon, but three of the New Castle and two of the Sharon theatres are just now in darkness. The local has 25 members.

Business Representative B. M. Freeborne reports that up until lately working conditions have been quite satisfactory, but the hard times have given them the same jolt every one else has received. Some of the managers of New Castle were hit personally by hard luck, too. A week or 10 days before our visit, three of them motored down to Pittsburgh to attend some sort of testimonial dinner. On the way back the motor went haywire, car turned a somersault or two and the three managers were pretty badly shaken up, but I understand they are all out again—with testimonial dinners off their list.

Freeborne reports all men working—with the word "fortunately" appended to this statement. There are 18 men in New Castle and nine in Sharon, all working.

The president of the local is John Brogan. Other officers are: Stephen Hardy, vice-president; Howard L. Boyd, business representative of Sharon; N. D. Freeborne, business representative of New Sharon; George Ferguson, secretary, and Walter Lichensteine, financial secretary.

After the long mountain drive your editor crawled into the hotel haypile to rest before the lecture. When they awoke me at midnight it was raining and said I to myself, said I: "Small meeting; no managers; no men from outside towns." In all of that I was in error. There were not only several managers present, but also men from Butler. Beaver Falls, Ambridge, Sharon and Meadville, Pa. Incidentally, Meadville is more than 50 miles away, and, as I said, it was raining. Butler and Sharon are about 30 miles away and Beaver Falls is 20 miles.

I have seldom had a more wideawake, appreciative audience. After it was over, many came up, shook hands and expressed themselves well pleased. One man said: "I drove 50 miles tonight to hear you, but that's nothing. The first time I heard you I drove 250 miles and, Rich, it was worth it."

My compliments to local number 451. It handled the meeting "job" well. That hard "cider" they handed me before the meeting had quite a snap to it.

WABASH AVENUE

CHICAGO

The big noise last week was the opening of "The Champ" at the McVickers. Wallace Beery and Jackie Cooper packed 'em in double rows along the sidewalk in a way that would convince any skeptic that "happy days are here again." If you think the dear public is fed up on films take a stroll around to McVickers. The sight is pretty sure to give you a thrill.

MUSIC AND TALENT

STAGE SHOWS

Brooklyn Paramount

Week ending December 3

The whole stage-show this week features and is built around that radio favorite, Russ Columbo. Though there are other good performers on the bill, no one else is mentioned and each does his bit and exits with a smattering of applause. It is Columbo the audience have come to see and hear and they never seem to get enough of him.

He works throughout the show, singing through a "mike" the songs that have gained him a nationwide popularity, leading the band, which is on the stage, and making whatever announcements are necessary.

Among the performers on the bill are Costello and Lee, tap and eccentric acrobatic dancers, Ramon and Ruth, rhumba dancers, Armida, screen and stage star, the Six Candreva Bros., cornetists, and the 16 Dave Gould Dancers.

Outstanding among these is the work of Armida and the Six Candreva Bros.

One of the most beautiful finales ever presented here was built around Columbo and Dick Burton, the band's drummer. It was the story of drums, told by Columbo, and acted by the entire cast, as Burton played the necessary bits. As the curtain lowered, the Dave Gould girls formed a drum ensemble. The stirring beats of many drums outshone all the other instruments in the band, just as Columbo finished his musical story.

This young fellow is personable, and, though famous as a singer, is a good showman as well. It looks as if Brooklyn has taken him to its heart.

Denver Denver

Week ending November 25

The Fanchon & Marco "Montmartre" Idea, a jumble of 'most everything that might be found in the Latin and artists' quarters in Paris, was well received by the Denver audience.

All the scenery depicts spots in Paris, and opens with Apaches, flower girls, artists and others strolling about doing their stuff as James La Marr sings. Just back of the flower girls is what appears to be a huge flower pot—it comes to life as the flowers prove to be the hats of the 12 girls of the line. They do several dances and La Marr sings again. The Duval Sisters distribute large colored balloons to the line which they use in a number, also for bouncing as the Duval Sisters do a dance number. The next backdrop has a round opening for the screen on which is thrown a travelogue of Paris. The line do their routine with tambourines, a fast number and requiring hard work. The third backdrop has names of famous Paris resorts and cafes in lights, and the Duval Sisters return for another twin dance. Dolores, Eddy and Douglas do some clever adagio work, including hand and foot balancing. In the third routine the line with their grotesque false faces present a weird sight. Joe Jackson does his dance and come-apart bicycle act without saying a word and the audience got a laugh out of it. The finale takes place in front of the Latin quarter with part of the line riding a merry-go-round that really runs.

EARL ABEL

"Author of one hundred sure flop solos. Writer of unpopular songs. Personality—Bust. Guaranteed Disappointment.

"For proof, ask the managers of the Congress, Chicago, the Paramount, Los Angeles, and the Paramount, Brooklyn."

The above picture is of Earl at the console of Publix Texas theatre, San Antonio, where he is playing his fourth return engagement.

The gag that starts this caption is a sample of Earl's Scotch humor. He uses it at the top of his personal letterheads, but he really is just the opposite of those things and a regular fellow.

Organist Comeback Starting in Canada

The organs are coming back in Canada. In various moving picture houses of the Dominion the consoles are being dusted off and once more the pipes are being heard at regular performances.

For instance, a pipe organ solo is being featured at the Uptown theatre, Toronto, a 3,000-seater. At the Imperial theatre, the organ has been used recently as special musical accompaniment for both talking features and comedies, the organ being played by Kathleen Stokes during appropriate sequences.

Cantor To Continue On Air

Eddie Cantor will continue to be heard regularly over a National Broadcasting Company coast-to-coast hook-up through the month of January, NBC announces. The arrangement is by special plan, considering his film contracts.

STAGE SHOWS

Baltimore Century

Week ending November 26

Judging by the applause given every act featuring Benny Davis and his "Future Broadway Stars," tabloid revue, this attraction should go over big anywhere. It was introduced by Al Hornig, Century organist, playing "I'm Happy When You're Happy," with words on the screen about everyone being happy that Benny Davis is back with his gang. With the band upstage, Benny Davis sings "I Should Worry." Sunny O'Day goes into novelty tap work. Next comes Norma Tooney and Jimmy Bell, doing tap steps. Jackie Heller next accompanies himself with guitar, singing "Dream Your Troubles Away," encoring with "I Don't Know Why I Love You Like I Do." Benny, with comedy, turns over the baton to Jackie who became M. C. He introduces Billy Severn, doing novelty tap work with handsprings and somersaults. Next Nora Tooney and Jimmy Bell again, in a comic collegiate dance number. Heller brings Martha Ray down stage and Martha sings "Minnie, the Moocha," to very big applause and encores with "I'm Guilty of Loving You." Vilma and Buddy Esson do novelty comic dance duet. Benny Davis returns singing "I'm On the Right Side of the Right Girl Right Now."

Cincinnati Albee

Week ending December 4

The current bill will not send the reviewers searching through the office thesaurus for new adjectives; it is nevertheless judiciously diversified and entertaining. Merinoff's Russian canines occupy the opener with a little two-scene playlet, working from a miniature stage with special drops, props and costumes, executing their clever tricks "on their own" without a trainer in sight, although a marionette supplants the human element in some of the stunts.

Ewing Eaton opens in full evening male attire for a violin number during which she executes a novel dance, following with a song, then more dancing while playing a saxophone. Changing to feminine attire on the stage, she repeats the combination violin and dance turn, finally changing to scantier costume for additional string harmony. For an encore, she does a lively acrobatic dance.

Hugh Skelly, with Helen Honan and Virginia Smith, together with an unbilled femme and male assistant, offer a skit, "A Bad Guy Out for a Good Time," which is a hodgepodge of songs, tap, acrobatic and various other types of hoofing, the entire routine being punctuated with hokum by Skelly, which has its moments.

Holding the headline billing and on next to closing is Gus Van, formerly of the stage team of Van and Schenk, who does a repertoire of songs in straight, Irish, Jewish, Italian and Negro dialects of which the customers did not seem to get enough. For an encore, he offers "Just a Gigolo" in German, together with a number of other German songs.

Eva Puck and Sam White close the show in "Bits of Their Hits." These former stars of Ziegfeld's "Show Boat" have much the same act as seen here on their previous visit, although it goes over just as big. Their travesty on the old-time melodrama is still good for continuous laughs. They were the applause hit of the show, taking five bows and an encore, "The Girl Friend," their own creation.

UP AND DOWN THE ALLEY

HELLO EVERYBODY!

Here after, slides of the songs from the firm of Davis, Coots & Engel are to be procured from Marie Adam of Leo Feist. . . . A sort of amalgamation of the slide department. . . . It must be true, I got it from four sources, Marie Adam, Nathan Feist, J. Fred Coots and Harry Engel. . . .

Lynn McReynolds, better known as "The Muse of the Organ," and still better known as "Mack," is not only the featured organist at the Egyptian, Scottsbluff, Neb., but is also the staff organist for station KGBY and broadcasts three times daily. . . . The recent acquisition of orchestras in the Pennsylvania towns of Pottsville and Hazelton has worked out very successfully and they may even put organists in these houses around the first of the year.

Wild Oscar (Lloyd Hill) now has a stooge and his name is Egon Daugherty. Kidding aside, these two organists are great pals and Oscar has a lot of fun telling people Dougherty is his stooge. . . . Floyd Wright is the new organist at the Fox California, Berkeley, Cal. . . . Hal Beckett has taken Ron & Don's place at the Brooklyn Fox. . . . Hal was house organist and it is his first chance at solo work. . . . Ron & Don are to be transferred to another Skouras house.

Dropped in to see Will Rockwell, the Beau Brummell of Harms, the other day. . . . Will is just as debonair as is usual with him, and he has taken on some weight. . . . Incidentally, Les Santly has also taken on some weight and it becomes both of them. . . . George Nyklicek, perhaps one of the finest organists on the West Coast, but practically unknown to Easterners, has been staff organist for KPO, San Francisco, for the past year. . . .

Many organists are plugging that fine new tune of Witmark's, "Right Across the Way." . . . The reason they are is because Norman Foley, head of the Organ and Slide department, is on the go from morn to night, seeing many of them and writing to the others. . . . Foley is a hustler and an asset to any firm. . . . Bill Wiemann, sales manager for Marks, has the distinction of being a music man who calls on the trade via airplane. . . . It happened that a sudden change in schedule decided Bill to get from Wichita to Denver in a hurry, so he and Mrs. Wieman, who accompanies Bill on most of his trips, grabbed themselves a handful of "crate" and flew the 680 miles. . . .

STAGE SHOWS

San Antonio Majestic

Week ending November 18

This was a unit show and there was not a dull moment in the entire program.

First was George Tapps' Revue with the two comics, Stuart and Lash, billed as the "Believe It or Nuts." George did some clever tap dancing with eight girls in the background, beating drums. Stuart then wisecracked and undertook his duties as M. C. The second frame brought out the tenor, John Steele, who did "Hosanna," "Come to Me" and "Marcheta." Then some more clowning and spieling by one of the comedy pair, who got serious for once and introduced Steele again as the deacon who comes out in the next scene called "Harlemania," or, in other words, Broadway after nightfall. Ida Shilbey does a nifty fight and turns to walk up a flight of stairs. One of the girls "shoots" her and she makes a splendid fall down the stairs. The parson then bursts forth into song. Helen Johns and Her Band appears with the same eight young women in the orchestra. Two of the girls do a violin trio with the M. C., who goes into a song with a megaphone.

The "nit-wits" are out again and do some clowning with a clapboard gag, and one fair girl. Later Miss Shilbey offers another acrobatic and eccentric dance which is a knockout. The comedians do "Harry, the Harmonica King," with Stuart on the mouthorgan and Lash strumming the guitar.

Seattle Orpheum

Week ending November 18

The "Two Birds of Paradise" in their gorgeous costumes proved to be the most winsome young twins who headed the stage show. They were formerly featured in the Berlin Revue of "Herman Haller," the Ziegfeld of Germany. They are the celebrated Dodge Sisters and they put on their novel dance routines and many clever European songs. Sammy Cohen, famous comedian of stage and screen, also went over nicely. The Forum Boys offered a group of syncopated harmony numbers with their own guitars' accompaniment, while Kluting's animal stars completed an exceptionally strong stage bill. Especially clever exploitation ideas with tieups for the Misses Beth and Betty Dodge were found in the leading hotels and shoe shops.

Stage Show Missing; Saenger Patrons Miffed

Disappointment prevails among the thousands who are regular patrons of the Publix Saenger theatre in New Orleans over the non-arrival of Publix vaudeville which has been a source of enjoyment for many years.

True, the features are superb, the orchestra among the finest and the gigantic organ under the manipulations of Herbie has its many devotees, but there is something missing. However, rounding out the program this week are Lou Forbes' classical and semi-classical bits, supported by the soprano voice of Alice Gottschalk, who is wellknown to New Orleans radio audiences, and the organlogue by Herbie, which also received a big hand.

Vaude at Nashville Princess

The Princess theatre at Nashville will present four vaudeville acts in conjunction with a picture program, the new policy in effect November 20. The vaudeville will be a full-week stand.

Milwaukee Wisconsin

Week ending November 26:

Del Chain, in the role of mailman, serves as master of ceremonies during Fanchon & Marco's "Holiday Greetings" Idea. The first episode is built around the birthday greeting and features Dorothy Thieme, singer; the Collenette ballet and John and Harriet Griffith. "Sweet Sixteen" is sung by Miss Thieme, while John and Harriet Griffith dance in an entertaining manner to "When You and I were Seventeen."

Jimmy Clemins offers a clever dance bit as well as a vocal selection, "Goodbye Broadway, Hello Montreal."

The next episode represents Easter greetings with the Collenette ballet performing before an Easter setting. Buster and Brown, eccentric dancers, clown about in great fettle and make a hit with the audience.

Del Chain offers "Way Down upon the Swanee River," and the "Anvil Chorus," on a pocket size xylophone. The final two episodes include Valentine and Christmas greetings. The same entertainers perform in connection with each episode, with Miss Thieme singing "Silent Night, Holy Night."

The work of the Collenette ballet is especially good and in each episode use is made of a small turntable to produce unusual effects. In the first scene, four of the dancers are garbed in costumes representing a quarter section of birthday cake, each with four candles. They unite on the table to form the entire cake. In the Christmas greeting scene, four of the dancers unite to form a large Christmas tree, upon which the lights are lit in the grand finale.

This Organist Performs Outside the Show Hours

An organist who is engaged to play in the theatres only outside of performance hours and when there is no one present but the scrub women, is the newest and most unusual position to be created in New Orleans. When United Theatres, Inc., let organists out of its 16 subsequent-run houses in this city, a decision to retain the organs and keep them in condition was reached. To this end an organist is engaged to make the round of the houses during the week and play a specified time on each organ.

Calloway at Warner House

Cab Calloway has been signed by the Warner artists' bureau to appear at the Stanley in Jersey City, week of December 18. It will be Calloway's second Warner engagement.

Plays Give Opposition

Stage opposition is opening up in Oklahoma City. Warner Players, stock, got off to a flying start at the Warner theatre, replacing RKO vaudeville and pictures. Russell Taylor is the new manager.

ORGAN SOLOS

BILL MEEDER (Richmond Hill RKO) presented a comedy solo this week entitled "Sense and Nonsense." The laughable and entertaining solo was thoroughly enjoyable. But it is not the titles or even the stories attached to his solos that the audience look for, it is his playing of the organ, the rhythmic style and pleasing combinations he uses, that have earned him his enviable reputation and popularity. Their appreciation of the work of the true artist is shown many times during a solo, and it is this, the true artist, which means so much to this audience. Interspersed with gags and specials were the three featured numbers "Faded Summer Love," "Call Me Darling," and "Roll On Mississippi."

KEN WRIGHT (Rhinelander Lloyd's State) presented an outstanding and original microphone novelty this week which was a takeoff on a radio broadcast. The announcements were as if some trick announcer were blabbing from station NUT. Many local names and places were used in conjunction with gags. This kept the house in a continual uproar. Songs featured in the solo are from motion pictures and musical comedies and the audience sang all of them. This solo received much comment and applause.

DAN DANIELS (Green Bay Fox) presented a timely organ solo called "Depression, Who Said So?" that went a long way in helping the audience forget their troubles. Special lyrics to "Wanna Sing About You" told the audience that the way to end depression was to sing a song. At the show caught, the audience certainly tried their best (by singing loudly) to end it, and undoubtedly many went away with a happier feeling after listening and singing to this entertaining solo. First song was "Guilty," followed by "Now that You're Gone," German lyrics to "Two Hearts," "Bend Down Sister," and "You Call It Madness," as the community-singing songs. Other popular songs were used with special lyrics for singing and notes for whistling. Solo did so well that the audience requested an encore, and would not stop applauding until Daniels played "Call Me Darling," and they sang it.

"Dan" has earned a great popularity since he came to that theatre and he certainly deserves it because he works very hard to please everyone.

JOHN HAMMOND (Brooklyn Strand), the new organist at this house, is featuring an original and topical novelty called "Singing the News Away," for his opening solo.

Heretofore the organ was in the pit; now it is on rollers on the stage, which really seems to be the place for this particular organ. Not only does it looks better but it gives the organist a chance to be seen and work easier to his audience. Hammond answers some of the questions asked in the "agony" columns of a newspaper by playing tunes with special lyrics. The first is "Million Dollar Baby," followed by "Many Happy Returns." As an interlude, Hammond offers his own arrangement of "Waters of Minnetonka," which he plays beautifully in concert style. Following this, he surprises the audience by singing in a distinctly novel conversation and whispering style a popular number entitled "Right Across the Way." For closing the audience sang "Shine On, Harvest Moon."

GAYLORD CARTER (Hollywood Hollywood) presented as his organ solo this week the same "Radio Popularity Contest" which has been reviewed in this column as done by other organists. Carter, however, added a few original twists. In place of the famous artists given in the original version, he injected names of local favorites, which really gave it more of a punch. As a whole, this solo was mediocre, considering the fact that Carter is an unusually clever organist.

WILD OSCAR (Brooklyn RKO Albee) offered a community-singing solo this week which was not up to the entertainment standard set by this organist. Apparently it was because of lack of time. Nevertheless the audience sang well. Three popular songs, two choruses of the first two and one of the last, were sung, with Oscar leading the singing nicely.

PAUL MILLER (Gowanda Hollywood) proved his good taste and playing ability in his recent "Memories of Autumn" solo, which was outstanding for its beautiful registrations, combinations and lighting effects. Songs offered were "Memories," "Trees," "Faded Summer Love," and "Shine On, Harvest Moon." The entire solo was centered and rendered around registrations, harmonizing with clever lighting effects.

OVERTURES

HAL SAUNDERS (Cincinnati RKO Albee), who succeeded Sam Freed, Jr., three weeks ago as conductor of the 15-piece orchestra, is rapidly gaining in popularity with the local fans both from a personal and musical standpoint. He possesses a pleasing personality, and finished technique, paying meticulous attention to every little detail which is emphatically reflected in the overtures.

For the week ending December 4 the orchestra presents old compositions of Walter Donaldson, such as "My Blue Heaven" and "Yes, Sir, That's My Baby." However, instead of offering these erstwhile favorites as a straight medley, Saunders has worked them up into the form of a William Tell overture, and the novelty found an unusually hearty response on the part of the audience.

FRED SCHMITT (Denver Denver) and his orchestra, in their "Memories of 1918" overture, give another reason why so many Denver people are regular Denver patrons week after week. There are many salsmen making this territory whose time does not permit them to stay to an entire show, but who make it a point to hear this orchestra whenever possible. The "Memories of 1918" was presented because of Armistice Day and included many favorites of that year: "Over There," "Roses of Picardy," "Madelon," "My Buddy" and "When You Come Back." For the finale the curtain was raised showing two huge American flags with a large picture of Woodrow Wilson in the center, and pictures of heroes of the World War around the edges of the flags. An effective overture and finale.

LOU FORBES (New Orleans Saenger) offers another overture of popular numbers this week which gets over in fine style. Forbes opens with "Lady of Spain," finely orchestrated and having a vocal refrain accompanied by a muted trumpet; then comes a "Goodnight Sweetheart," which is drawn out into too many choruses to give the various orchestral soloists a chance. Violins carry the melody at first, followed by a vocal solo, then trumpets and trombones blowing through white megaphones, a bell and vibraphone arrangement and another vocal solo accompanied by the orchestra humming through clenched teeth. The singer finally goes into a paraphrase of "Goodnight Ladies," accompanied by strings, reed and the organ's vox. As a closer is introduced "Nobody's Sweetheart," which is the perennial "Somebody Stole My Girl" back under another name. This is rounded out in a sure-fire jazz finish. The audience liked it.

WALT ROESNER (San Francisco Fox) and the Fox Concert Orchestra turn to modern composers this week and offer "Rhythms of the Day," a medley of compositions that have had more than passing popularity. These are tied together in symphonic style, which enhances their beauty. Included among the numbers are "With a Song in My Heart," "A Garden in the Rain," "Falling in Love Again," "I Kiss Your Hand, Madam," "Two Hearts in Waltz Time" and "My Heart Stood Still." Joaquin Garay offers as a vocal solo the radio theme song, "You Call It Madness."

SAMUEL BENAVIE (Detroit Fisher), Detroit's best-loved orchestra leader, turns out another of his musical smashes this week. Sammy directs his thirteen artists through a medley of favorite Victor Herbert selections, beginning with "March of the Toys." Then follow "Sweethearts," in which the organ joins under the fingers of Arsene Siegel; "The Fortune Teller," "When You're Away," with a trumpet solo by Horace Houck; the "Wooden Shoe" dance; "Sweet Mystery of Life," with a violin solo by Samuel Bistritzky, and finally selections from "Mlle. Modiste."

PHIL FABELLO (New York Coliseum) and His Entertainers presented a group of "eye" numbers which were offered in a good style and built up into a pleasing overture. Fabello makes all announcements himself and leads his orchestra to perfection, never hogging the spotlight when one of his boys is doing a solo bit and is always the showman. This aggregation of musicians is extremely popular here and mean as much to the house as a name attraction.

DAVE SMASON (San Antonio Majestic) and His RKO-Lians offered a special arrangement of "At Your Command." Smason had them play this popular number several different ways. Then came a violin trio with David, Frank Hernandez and Gene De Mattis doing the honors, accompanied on the organ by Mac Bridwell. Smason put the musicians over in fine style.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut toward such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features which are finished or are in work, but to which release dates have not been assigned, are listed in "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplies by the distributors. Where they vary, the change is probably due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1931, unless otherwise specified.

MOTION PICTURE HERALD

Vol. 105, No. 11 — December 12, 1931

Pictorialization

THE other day a considerable reverberation of protest arose among cameramen in Hollywood because the recent award for photographic honors of the year by the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences went to the photographer of a glorified scenic production, "Tabu." There is considerable merit in the complaint. Given any reasonably good camera, a piece of gauze and some panchromatic film, any cameraman beyond the amateur stage can pluck down sentimentally backlighted clouds, rippling waves, waterfalls sparkling in the green murk of the jungle, and the like. Several large photographic reputations have been made in that simple manner.

It is possible by the application of that formula even yet to pull the critics out of their seats with exclamations about masterful photography. The industry, outside the studio, the critics and the public are all alike pictorially illiterate. They all respond to good pictorial composition and quality of rendition, but they are unaware of it unless the picture includes Mauna Loa exploding in pink flames against the green Pacific with sun-shot storm clouds in the background.

Hollywood camera technique steadily improves. It has acquired vastly from the Germans and the Russians, and it is now assimilating rather than copying.

It is curious, and unfair, that a cameraman has to go out in the big open spaces to get pictorial fame, when the hard labor, the difficult problems are within the confines of the studios. The able out-of-doors men's names are familiar enough to the industry; immediately come to mind Van Scoy, Bruce, Cavalieri, Flaherty, Shoedsack, and justly enough are they known, but such notable studio contributors as Karl Struss, Cronjager, Freund, Garmes and Howe are just names on the credit title.

Improved recognition of the studio cameraman's contribution is one step toward the restoration of pictures to motion pictures. In spite of a lot of talk there are about as many eyes as ears in the audience yet.

Publicity

THE motion picture industry could do with a deal less publicity. Its products, motion pictures, can do with considerably more.

No other industry in this large oblate world is so beset by self-appointed experts and amateur advisers, all of whom cheerfully and joyously leap into the columns of the local paper with opinions and advice on picture finance, picture art, picture morals, studio and theatre operation. Every week press and pulpit and sewing circles and the Sons-of-What-Have-You present decisions, adopt resolutions and initiate cosmic movements about everything affecting the industry except the manufacture of the raw stock and the shape of the film cans.

In part the industry itself is responsible, through paying too much heed to petty pestiferators and snarlers. Every letter to the papers, every adverse editorial, every bitter sermon does not require a reply.

Also, considerably more in Hollywood than in New York, there is evidence of a failure to discriminate between what is the proper interest of the motion picture business press serving the industry, and the interest of the Paul Prys collecting, evolving and inventing material for the gossip columns of the public press.

And, yet, an amazing condition has been reached under which no publicity office in these days even purports to purvey the news of the corporation, with the one notable exception of the Eastman Kodak Company. Recently when there was a mishap in the Eastman Rochester plant costing a number of lives, the story was put on the wire to the properly interested publications long before reporters had heard of it. The story told the news, even the bad news, flatly, briefly and with accuracy.

In these days of stress the motion picture is more than ever under the eyes of the public press, and here and there are evidences of a developing new policy, conspicuously in the case of RKO, where twice within the month officials of the concern have invited the news writers into audience sessions in an endeavor to get the news across without incurring the chip-on-shoulder attitude that reporters assume when they have to dig for material.

Presently perhaps the motion picture will not be so good a story, and motion pictures will be better stories.

"A Friend in Need"

THE committee in charge of Film Daily's Annual Relief Fund this week set in motion the machinery of a campaign for the collection of money in the Eastern sector of the motion picture to be used to aid the needy, the sick and the unemployed of the industry in this region.

For the last several years this fund has been in operation, giving aid to hundreds, feeding hungry families, halting evictions and buying fuel and clothing, paying hospital and medicine bills. It is apparent that this year the demands upon this fund will be greater than before.

The proceeds of the collection are expended solely and exclusively in the industry. Checks should be sent to Mr. Jack Alicoate, Film Daily, 1650 Broadway, New York.

A Jersey Record

A REMARKABLE achievement in able showmanship has been recorded in the performance of sixteen Jersey City theatres which raised $31,178.40 for the unemployment relief fund at midnight performances on Thanksgiving eve. This is nearly a third as large as the total attained in New York City. In Jersey City Jack Keale of Skouras theatres was chairman and George Drummond of Loew's Jersey City theatre was treasurer.

WHAT THE PRESS SAYS

OHIO vs. N. Y.

THE TIMES-STAR of CINCINNATI, despite the fact that it is somewhat misinformed concerning RKO in two respects, presents an editorial which is a significant reflection of an attitude toward New York held by many communities, usually less articulate. It says:

Hard upon the failure of the country's biggest theatrical enterprise, the Shubert Theatre Corporation, which owns, controls or operates 70 leading houses in this country, comes the announcement of an application for a receivership by the RKO movie theatre combine, largest of its kind, with seven houses in Cincinnati and a multitude elsewhere. It is said for the Shuberts that the exorbitant joint demands of the unions of stagehands and musicians nullified economies which business depression required, and that, unable to shorten sail, they could not ride out the storm. Perhaps a program of expectations and outlay based upon fat years and not fitted for lean ones explains the parallel plight of RKO.

Friends of stage and screen, which means about everybody, will regret both major misadventures in the field of amusement. Yet there may be a lesson to be learned from each. It is the oldest lesson in history that when anything gets too big it falls apart. Perhaps the amusement field has become too centralized, and a measure of decentralization is the way out. Why, for example, should Cincinnati houses feel the shock because there is unsatisfactory theatre patronage on the Atlantic or Pacific Coast? In politics, Ohio has control of its own government as completely as New York does. In entertainment, why should it be merely a province of New York City? For both stage and screen, the metropolis undertakes to do all the thinking in matters of amusement for the rest of the country. It tells every city what it ought to like, and houses here and elsewhere take what is sent to them.

Not so long ago theatre managers in each city made this choice themselves. Why shouldn't they be the best judges?

The answer is, obviously enough, that neither Cincinnati nor any other one American city, including New York, can alone support an amusement policy expressed in terms of the motion picture. It takes the buying power of the nation. Also Broadway is not a street in New York; it is rather the midway of a continent.

DEFENDED

THE CATHOLIC REGISTER of KANSAS CITY makes a brave defense of the motion picture, both its art and its morals, in an editorial saying:

According to officials of the Chicago public library the people have gone Victorian in their literary tastes. It may be that there has been a revival of reading aloud in the family circle. This would create a demand for novels that are reasonably safe for such reading.

The Victorian novels were dreadfully long. In English there never has been a novel just like Thackeray's "Vanity Fair." For humor and pathos Dickens has no superior. These novelists were the giants of days that are gone. Modern fiction is written primarily for the screen. Despite all the unkind things said of the movie directors they usually improve any story they undertake to photograph. They leave out enough to make graphic that which originally was only banal. We may criticize the films but as a rule they are more wholesome than the books from which they are extracted.

This may explain a return to the Victorian novel for reading. Criticism of the film today does not always mean criticism of those who take part in the production. We know that many of the men and women appearing in our movies are morally superior to those who wrote the filthy books from which some of the productions are taken.

ARE YOU SMART?

THE TIMES of NEW YORK solemnly reports in its news columns on the latest scientific opinion concerning laughter, as follows:

Newark, N. J., Dec. 3.—Laughter was a sure index of a man's intelligence, Professor Carl G. Gaum of the Rutgers University Extension Division declared in a talk here tonight at the Management Institution, conducted by Rutgers.

"Tell me what you laugh at and I'll tell you your mental age," he said.

"A moron, a half-wit, even an idiot, can laugh at other people's mishaps; the man who can laugh at a superstition, a custom, a tradition, an institution, must be an observer; but the man who can genuinely laugh at himself is truly intelligent."

The business depression had caused the rediscovery of satire in America, Dr. Gaum said. "Is it is the expression of disillusion, yet not without its salutary effects.

"I consider this bitter humor of the day, evident on stage and screen, in book and magazine, a natural accompaniment of the deflation period. A play satirizing Hollywood, a picture making the gangster a posing fool instead of a hero, will go a long way toward clarifying our attitude toward these two American products."

WORDS FOR MARIE

The NEWS INDEX of EVANSTON, which is next door to Chicago, presents an outgiving by Watler Kerr, in which he observes:

This week the MOTION PICTURE HERALD, leading trade journal of the films, made known the results of its yearly research into the box office successes of the past year. The theatrical year 1930-31 (judged from August of 1930 to August of 1931) had its usual percentage of outstanding films, although there is a tendency to discover in the so-called "big money" films that, of themselves, were not noteworthy, but were made profitable through popular names. . . .

Marie Dressler was evidently the outstanding single drawing power of the past season. Three pictures in which she was starred are to be found on the list: "Min and Bill," "Politics" and "Reducing." Whether or not she had Polly Moran or Wallace Beery with her does not seem to make much difference; Marie Dressler is the name that has brought the crowds to the theatre. . . .

One notable case of a very mediocre picture succeeding through strong "name draw" and heavy advertising is that of "Check and Double Check." When Amos and Andy were coupled with the nation-wide advertising campaign, it made little difference whether or not the picture itself was any good. These movies!

INDUSTRY READY TO BATTLE PROPOSED 10 PER CENT TAX ON ALL ADMISSIONS

Exhibitors of Nation Are Expected to Make Concerted Effort to Prevent Enactment; Pettijohn Going Into Action

By FRANCIS L. BURT
Herald Washington Bureau

Return to war-time conditions faces the motion picture theatre industry under the Hoover Administration's tax plan as submitted to Congress this week by the President and by Andrew W. Mellon, Secretary of the Treasury.

Affecting millions of theatregoers, the outstanding recommendation in so far as the industry is concerned is a proposal to tax all admissions 10 per cent. Specifically, admissions of 10 cents and above were mentioned. The present tax law levies an impost of 10 per cent only on tickets costing $3 or more.

Netted $90,000,000 in a Year

While individuals and concerns in the industry will also be affected by the higher rates on income of individuals and corporations and by the excise taxes proposed, interest centers around the admission tax under which, with a similar exemption of 10 cents, nearly $90,000,000 was collected in a single year a decade ago.

If the President's tax program is put into effect January 1, as he hopes, the higher taxes would prevail for 30 months, repeal of the proposed revenue act being promised for July 1, 1934, by which time it is hoped the economic situation of the country will have returned to normal.

Hopes that the admission tax would not be as severe as Secretary Mellon recommends were expressed following the reading of the President's budget message to Congress, in which he advocated a return to the revenue act of 1924, with such changes as might be necessary in the light of altered conditions. That bill carried an admission exemption of 50 cents and under it, in the following fiscal year, taxes on box office sales totaled $29,991,812.

Price Level Higher Now

Details of the tax plan, the President told Congress, would be made known by Secretary Mellon and reference to the latter's report disclosed that wartime practices were to be imposed upon the theatres of the country. The tax will be far more severe than it was 10 years ago, it is declared, because of the fact that the level of admission prices today is considerably greater than it was then, although profits are admittedly lower.

Secretary Mellon's recommendation for a 10 per cent tax on all tickets came as a surprise. It had been expected that an impost of some nature would be recommended, but few within the inner circle of motion picture executive ranks familiar with the workings of Washington expected that a 10 per cent fee would be recommended on practically all theatre admissions. The report, they concluded, is a most vivid indication of the extent to which the finances of the country have been affected.

Charles C. Pettijohn, of the MPPDA and leader in the industry's battles against adverse legislation, will again take up the cudgels in a fight to be staged at Washington when and if Secretary Mellon's proposal finds its way into bill form. The most widespread battle against the tax ever staged by the industry is expected, with exhibitors of the entire country joining in a concerted effort to prevent its enactment. It is felt within the industry that theatres are not netting sufficient profit to pay the tax, which fact would compel passing the Government revenue-getter on to theatregoers.

Not only will the theatre operator have to account for his admission taxes, but he will be subjected to severe taxes personally. The normal income tax rates are to be increased from 1½, 3 and 5 per cent to 2, 4 and 6 per cent, and personal exemptions are to be reduced from $1,500 to $1,000 for individuals and from $3,500 to $2,500 for heads of families. The corporation tax rate is to be increased from 12 to 12½ per cent and the present exemption of $3,000 granted corporations with net incomes of $25,000 or less is to be eliminated.

Other Taxes Proposed

A stamp tax of 2 cents is to be imposed upon each check and draft; a tax of 5 cents on telephone, telegraph, cable and radio messages costing from 14 to 50 cents and 10 cents on messages costing in excess of 50 cents; the rate of postage on first-class mail is to be increased probably to 2½ or 3 cents; taxes on tobacco and its products, except cigars, will be raised one-sixth of the present rates; the stamp tax on capital stock sales and transfers is to be increased 1 cent; a stamp tax is to be imposed on conveyances of realty of 50 cents for each $500 of value in excess of $100, and the rates and exemptions of the estate tax are to be returned to their 1921 levels. Manufacturers' sales taxes are to be imposed on automobiles, trucks and accessories, radio and phonograph equipment.

Figures on the revenues anticipated from the miscellaneous taxes have not been made public by the treasury department, but the imposts on admissions, tobacco, automobiles, phonographs, conveyances, checks and telephone messages for the first six months of next year would return about $205,000,000 and for the following fiscal year $514,000,000.

"We are now face to face with a situation where for a time the current revenues of the Government under our existing laws have fallen below the amounts required to meet the absolutely necessary expenses," President Hoover declared in his budget message. "This brings the question directly before us of the course that shall be pursued. We cannot maintain public confidence nor stability of the federal government without undertaking some temporary tax increases.

"I recommend that Congress provide for an increase in taxation for a definite limited period and upon the general plan of taxation which existed under the revenue act of 1924 with such changes as may be appropriate in the light of altered conditions. It is proposed that this increase shall be definitely terminated in two years from next July. This plan, it is estimated, will realize $920,000,000 next year and thus balance the budget for the fiscal year 1933 except for the statutory debt retirement. It would balance the budget including debt retirement in the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1933. It would provide about $390,000,000 for the current year.

Members' Attitude a Question

"The plan of approximately re-enacting the revenue act of 1924 has the great advantage that the Government is equipped by experience with similar legislation for its systematic and economical collection. The public has paid such taxes in the past and has found them not intolerable and has found that they do not prevent increased prosperity. By providing a definite date for termination of the temporary increase it will allow taxpayers to look forward to definite relief."

Sufficient time has not yet elapsed for members of Congress definitely to determine the attitude they will adopt with respect to the Administration's program. Many of the recommendations made by Secretary Mellon were already embodied in measures among the more than 5,000 bills introduced in the opening days of the session. Sufficient time has not been given for the new line-up of the house of representatives, where the Democrats have a majority, to develop how Administration proposals will be affected.

The tax program will have to be considered by the ways and means committee of the house, this year under Democratic leadership. Before any bill is reported, carrying tax legislation, it is possible brief hearings may be called.

WHAT PROPOSED TAX WOULD DO

All theatre admissions of ten cents and over would be taxed 10 per cent under the Mellon plan.

Assessment would be in effect for 30 months, repeal being promised for July 1, 1934, in Hoover's program.

Similar tax raised $90,000,000 decade ago. New proposal called more severe on theatres due to higher admission level though profits are lower.

Exhibitors also would be subected to severe assessments personally, under income and corporation tax charges.

EVEN AUTHOR LIKES "ARROWSMITH"

"Who Is Dreiser?" Asks Sinclair Lewis, Who Says He Cried Real Tears Over the Picture Made From Own Story

Sinclair Lewis, Nobel prize winner and the discoverer of American "Babbittry," which comprises so large a sector of motion picture fandom, and author, among other works, of "Arrowsmith," has suddenly found himself mightily intrigued by—of all things—a "movie." The movie is Mr. Lewis' own "Arrowsmith."

"Arrowsmith" not only intrigued Lewis; it delighted him. Delighted him so much, in fact, that immediately after it was thrown on a New York screen for the first time, he permitted Lynn Farnol, obliging United Artists' publicist, to gather up a bevy of reporters and dramatic critics at the Lewis menage in East 90th street. There, for two hours, Lewis, the iconoclast, spoke as one dyed-in-the-wool movie fan to his fellows, discoursing on the undoubted merits of "Arrowsmith," the motion picture.

And in the pauses between his exclamations reporters managed to ask and obtain answers to a few—a very few—questions around which they hoped to build a yarn. But each interruption was met with increasing annoyance by Lewis, until, once, when a question which had just been answered was put to him by a girl reporter who, obviously, had difficulty in concentrating, the author upbraided the young woman.

"Darling," he reproved her, "you are not paying attention, else you would never have asked if this were the first story of mine to be filmed. I was just saying there were many others, but this is the first that ever 'got' me—the first with which I was completely satisfied."

Still another interruption was dealt with just as severely. A two-year-old youngster competed, vocally and gymnastically, with the head of the household for attention, and finally succeeded in so annoying her elder with interruptions of his praise of "Arrowsmith" that he was forced into action.

"Get that representative of the Chicago Tribune out of here," he commanded a secretary.

This done, he settled himself once more in the softly cushioned easy chair he occupied—easily the most comfortable in the room—and returned to his subject.

"'Arrowsmith'," he repeated, "is the first 'grown-up' picture." This pronouncement later became a refrain. "I am thoroughly satisfied with it just as it is. Nothing vital either to the story or to the picture has been omitted or eliminated. Even the ending is as ironic as the book's, and in this 'Arrowsmith' departs from the accepted movie treatment of popular novels."

Some one suggested at this point that Mr. Lewis' reaction to the screen version of "Arrowsmith" was in sharp contrast to the fuss kicked up by Theodore Dreiser in his outraged artistry over the finished production of "An American Tragedy."

"Dreiser?" queried Lewis. "Who is he? What does he do?"

"I realize," said Lewis, resuming, "that I am not a good critic because I'm just a kid

"ARROWSMITH," the Sinclair Lewis novel, done into screen drama by Samuel Goldwyn for United Artists, went before Broadway's most expertly critical audience Tuesday night, and triumphed.

This production in its extraordinary competency is a significant realization upon the possibilities of the sound screen, likely to long rank high in the art.

"Arrowsmith" by sheer force of its intelligence of content and execution is not a "showman's sensation." It is more important than that. It is a motion picture of high emotional content, yet escaping the proclamations of the obvious and the bathos so painfully typical of what mentally adult persons call "movies." This picture and its like can be used to vastly increase the screen audience in its upper strata and to importantly improve the status of the art.

One outstanding aspect of "Arrowsmith" on the screen is the consistent maintenance of mood and strong cohesion with a straight line flow in narration. Mr. Lewis' intensity of pursuit of the single-effect so essential to clean-cut drama, whether by word or picture, has been achieved on the screen. More than any other production of the talking screen this picture gives the impression of having been made the way all good works are done, by one man with an unclouded conception of what he was doing. The typical lacunæ which mark the scars of cutting room revisions and transplantations are not to be found. The technology and machinery of picture making, involving many hands and minds as it does, makes this an achievement of exemplary value.

In one instance only, the use of an all too obvious device of a contaminated cigarette to communicate disease, does the picture become "movie." Both its use in narration and its implications, in view of the scientific nature of the story, are implausible and jarring.

Despite all the perfection of its mounting and the excellence of the photography, this picture, like nearly every other production of the talking screen, leaves one with the sensation of having been played rather too much inside of four walls. A village long shot in the earlier sequences, a dash of sea and jungle in later ones, would have given the picture elbow room and would have preserved for it some of the restful scope of vision which so importantly contributed to silent pictures.

The casting of "Arrowsmith" is too satisfactory to require comment. No mediocre performance, in even the most minor role, mars the piece. Ronald Colman is quite at his best, and Richard Bennett is delightfully perfect. I have now seen Mr. Bennett die on the stage and screen in six languages, of everything from 1915 in "Damaged Goods" to 1931 in "Arrowsmith," and that is always a pleasure. TERRY RAMSAYE

Stellar Lights at "Arrowsmith" Show

United Artists world premiered "Arrowsmith" at the Gaiety theatre in New York on Monday night with the most important galaxy of stellar lights in attendance at a Broadway opening this season.

Samuel Goldwyn and Mrs. (Frances Howard) Goldwyn led a large group of United Artists officials which included General Sales Manager Al Lichtman, Arthur Kelley, in charge of foreign operations, and Harry Buckley and Lynn Farnol, who handled the opening. Marilyn Miller was there with Mervyn LeRoy, and Lilyan Tashman with Edmund Lowe. John Emerson and Anita Loos attended and so did Helen Twelvetrees, Armida, Flo Ziegfeld, Warren Hymer, Buddy Starbuck and a host of others, including Norman Douglas, Dr. Paul de Kruif, author of "The Microbe Hunters," and collaborator in scientific details of "Arrowsmith;" Arthur Hornblow, Jr., Jack Alicoate, publisher, and George Blair of the staff of Film Daily; Paul Burger, United Artists; Major Fred Herron and Frank Wilstach, of the MPPDA; Terry Ramsaye, editor of MOTION PICTURE HERALD, and James P. Cunningham of the same publication; Berthold Viertel, Paramount director; William Gaines, Associated Press; Sam Shane, of Variety; Alice Shay, Paramount player; Charles Hynes, Motion Picture Daily; Mordaunt Hall, N. Y. Times.

The initial screening was presided over by Author Sinclair Lewis as honor guest. His attendance differed from that by his literary-brother, Theodore Dreiser when Paramount premiered "American Tragedy," in that Lewis offered no objections to Samuel Goldwyn's interpretation of the medico-science profession as novelized by Lewis, whereas Dreiser evidenced resentment at the treatment accorded his "Tragedy." When Dreiser later brought the matter to court, Paramount was upheld.

GERMANS READJUST INDUSTRY TO MEET PROBLEM AS IN U. S.

Stars' Salaries Reduced at Least 20 Per Cent; Technical Staffs' Wages Cut; Lower Recording Costs Are Also Sought

By Staff Correspondent—Berlin

Germany's motion picture industry, confronted by problems generally identical, if less in dollar magnitude, with those which the worldwide depression has imposed on Hollywood, is now at work on a well oriented plan aimed at economies, improved efficiencies and more closely knit cooperations for the well-being of the whole cinema structure here.

The German plan, which has been progressively going into active operation since a memorable meeting of the leaders of the industry October 26, is under close observation by representatives of American concerns here and reports are going forward to Times Square and Hollywood.

In Berlin a considerable curiosity is evidenced among executives of German companies concerning the apparent deliberation with which Hollywood reforms and realignments are taking place.

Salaries Cut 20 Per Cent

Following out the terms of the extraordinarily far-reaching agreement made at the meeting of representatives of 33 companies in Berlin, stars' super-salaries have been reduced at least 20 per cent. Wages of the commercial and technical staffs—directors, cameramen and musicians among them—also have been pared.

Efforts to obtain from Tobis Klangfilm a reduction of license costs for the use of recording equipment and of royalties for domestic and foreign distribution have not fared as well. To date the negotiations with representatives of the sound equipment company have not been productive of results.

Meanwhile theatre owners, members of the exhibitors' association of Germany, not only approve of the readjustment steps undertaken, but also have determined to boycott the pictures of producers who do not live up to the agreement.

Situation Still Embarrassing

In spite of these developments the producing industry in Germany is still in a most embarrassing set of circumstances, due to the currency difficulty in Central Europe. Emergency laws prohibit payments except in native currency, which in turn cannot be sent out of the particular country in which it is issued.

The situation of German exhibitors also is serious, due in part to unemployment, double feature programs and reduced admission prices.

There are sufficient German productions available to meet the present demand, but a shortage of pictures suitable for first-run theatres is expected by February.

Unanimous opinion of producers that studio costs must be cut down, if the industry were to meet present economic needs, prompted the gathering of representatives of the producing organizations. All obligated themselves unconditionally to put into practice the following principles:

1. Salaries of stars are to be put back on a reasonable basis.
2. Actors' salaries are to be reduced at least 20 per cent under the salary last paid.
3. The services of such managers, secretaries, representatives and others who have been active as intermediaries shall be completely eliminated.
4. The wages of technical and technical-artistic personnel shall be reduced to the proportions of regular wages paid in other branches of industry. Under this list come directors, cameramen, architects, operators, bands and musicians, sound monitors, cutters, costumers, hair dressers, property people, photography directors, and others.

To insure application of these regulations to the producers' staffs, a department is being organized in the Spitzenorganization of the German motion picture industry, which will be instructed and authorized by all producers to issue figures on the wages last paid, costs of photographic apparatus, electric licenses, and so on, to the other producers and companies which adhere to that decision. The office of the Spitzenorganization is to be kept constantly informed of new contracts. In addition, a commission is to be appointed which, together with the Spitzenorganization, will test and supervise the adjustment of salaries of stars, actors and others and direct operation of the plan. Dr. Walter Plugger, president of the Spitzenorganization, has taken over direction of the project.

Seek Lower Sound Costs

Companies adhering to this decision bind themselves to make known the salaries paid by them also in the open market, as well as the charges for photographic apparatus and electrical licenses.

To obtain lower license costs for the use of photographic apparatus and reduced exploitation licenses, negotiations were opened immediately with Tobis-Klangfilm with the hope that these companies, too, will give consideration to the general situation in their prices and at least give immediate effect to promises given.

General reduction of the level of wages and raw material requires also lower prices for raw stock and negotiations to this end are being opened with the standard companies. The copying plants also are being approached regarding a reduction of prices for developing and printing.

Negotiations now in progress with studio owners anticipate a reduction in studio rentals.

The Spitzenorganization was requested, in conjunction with the unions associated with it, particularly the distributors and theatre owners, to do everything possible to put these principles into operation and to enact a resolution by which films produced contrary to these principles shall be excluded from exploitation.

Exhibitors Will Boycott Pictures of Producers Not Living Up to Agreement Entered Into by Entire Industry at Berlin

Licht Bild Bühne Approves

Licht Bild Bühne, Berlin daily motion picture publication, said editorially under the heading "Solidarity":

"That which the Licht Bild Bühne has been preaching for years has become a fact: The motion picture producers of Berlin sat in common at the roundtable. Difficulties in foreign and domestic business which threatened the existence of production have brought it about that definite decisions were reached to which the imposing entirety of the German film industrialists has put its name. The production front is closed. Late, but not too late.

"Not too late—if the decisions invited by economic logic are followed by the will to execute. To the solidarity of the producers, the solidarity of the distributors, which in general are identical with them, and the exhibitors must be bound in closest community of fate. The communique of the Industrialist Association indicates where the lever is to be applied; whoever seeks to attack from behind the much needed unity of the German motion picture industry in its efforts for reductions shall see how he may in the future exploit his films in Germany. The inter-relationship of the program of rationalization with admissions—that is, the carrying capacity of the theatres—is undeniable. The intelligence of the motion picture trade will stand behind the regulations of the industry, and everything depends on the centralization of determination, whose source of strength is our Spitzenorganization.

"The idea of solidarity must, above all, gain a foothold among the artistic, technical and trade coworkers of the film industry." We are confident that Germany's motion picture creators will see that the salvation of German films demands during this most critical period a mutuality of interest which each one must make his own."

STRUGGLE TO CONTINUE RKO REACHES CLIMAX IN BALTIMORE

Fuller Consideration Asked by Widow of One of Founders of Orpheum Circuit—Senator Dill Will Ask Inquiry

The struggle for the continuation of Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation reached its climax this week as officials and stockholders of the company prepared for the decisive meeting in Baltimore, Thursday, at which was to be presented to stockholders the company's plan of refinancing, on the acceptance or rejection of which, according to Hiram S. Brown, president, hinges the future of the company.

There was no indication that a postponement of the meeting would be asked up to shortly before the appointed time for its opening. On Wednesday, B. B. Kahane, RKO vice president and general counsel, predicted that approval of the plan was assured as the number of voting proxies on hand neared the required two-thirds. Kahane was prepared to leave for Baltimore where he was to be in readiness to preside at the stockholders' meeting in the event Hiram Brown found it impossible to attend.

Following the settlement of differences between the RKO Stockholders Protective Committee and the RKO management, which resulted in a reduction of the proposed $5 cash payment for each share of stock owned to $2.50, as recommended by the Protective Committee, new opposition to the management's financing plan was voiced by Caroline L. Kohl of Chicago, widow of one of the founders of the Orpheum Circuit and holder of 4,900 common A shares of RKO, and about 1,000 shares of Orpheum Circuit preferred. In a letter drafted by her attorney, George L. Schein, Mrs. Kohl asked that the meeting be adjourned for fuller consideration of the company's financial needs.

Dill to Ask Inquiry

Part of the letter sent in behalf of Mrs. Kohl to the management and Class A stockholders stated: "It is my opinion that the serious action contemplated should not be taken without greater deliberation and a fuller knowledge by the stockholders themselves of all of the facts. It does not seem, in view of the opportunities and tremendous amount of property of the corporation, that a receivership can be seriously considered or that immediate precipitate action is necessary."

Following a conference with RKO officials in New York on Wednesday, Schein was reported to have waived objections to disposition of the financing plan at Thursday's meeting in the event sufficient voting proxies to approve the plan were on hand at that time.

Senator Dill, Democrat, announced Wednesday in Washington that he would ask the senate to authorize an investigation of the refinancing of the RKO corporation. Dill has charged that the corporation, contemplating a refinancing program, required stockholders to contribute on a pro rata basis to $11,600,000 of corporation debentures.

Although expressing optimism over probabilities of collecting a favorable number of proxies in advance of the meeting, Kahane said that proxies only slightly in excess of 1,000,000 in number had been collected by Wednesday. Approximately 1,600,000 voting shares are required to approve the plan which would bring $11,600,000 in new capital into the company. Kahane said that RKO was privileged either to postpone or adjourn the meeting if it deemed such a procedure advisable.

Its Author Likes "Arrowsmith" Too

at the theatre. I cried real tears over my own story last night in the theatre. But I think it will be a box office success. I think it will mark a new era in honestly made pictures which will be box office successes."

It was learned that, despite the very pleasant results attained in "Arrowsmith," Lewis has no desire "to write something exclusively for the screen."

"No, no," he said. "I will write my stories and if they prove to be picture material, so much the better. I have no desire to work for Hollywood."

"Laughs at Offers"

"Why," emphasized his middle-aged secretary, a brittle, self-contained woman who sat across the room from the author, "Red receives plenty of offers from Hollywood, but he just sits back and laughs at them. He wouldn't consider any of them."

" 'Arrowsmith' is the first picture," Lewis again resumed, "that hasn't made me just a little sick watching 'him' getting 'her.' It shows that Hollywood has the talent capable of making intelligent, 'grown-up' pictures. I think it will be a success, although it means nothing to me financially whether it is or not. The story is sold and paid for."

An attendant broke into the room at this juncture with another interruption.

"Al Smith on the phone," he announced deliberately, so that there could be no mistaking the words.

In the interim Lewis must have had a premonition that he would be branded a "movie" fan in the morning papers, for, on his return to the room, he announced to the assembled guests: "Mind you, I am not praising the movies—only this one picture. It is the first I have ever seen that 'got' me, and I have seen numbers of others that were made from novels and short stories of mine."

He enumerated a few of them, "Main Street" among them. His "Elmer Gantry," he said, had been looked upon favorably by several producers until a specific ban was placed upon it by Will Hays.

"It's agin' God," he explained. "Offensive to too many."

Then a photographer stepped into the room and without asking permission or even a simple by-your-leave, set up his camera and focused it on the author, reclining comfortably in the softest chair in his living room. He took two flashes of Lewis alone and then asked that the "representative of the Chicago Tribune" be recalled to pose on papa's knee, for a third.

"There is a novel that has never been written," said Lewis, regarding the cameraman. "The story of the American newspaper photographer. Ordering senators around. It reminds me of my old days as a Washington correspondent. I was a good one, too," he added.

Mr. Lewis went on to envision a new era of adult motion pictures.

"Thirty years ago," he said, "a young man named George Horace Lorimer came along with a new and startling idea. He proposed to print magazine fiction which had something else beside sweet talk for Aunt Maria. And your Uncle Lorimer went on to make his magazine one of the most important literary molds in the country.

"Perhaps Samuel Goldwyn may be doing the same thing for the movies. The novelists have been writing honestly for the last few years, writers like Bill Faulkner and Hemingway. The movies may be starting to catch up.

"Sam Goldwyn or somebody in charge of the picture said, let's do something honest, and the movie is honest. I had nothing to do with the film, but it seems to me about the only movie I've seen which wasn't written down to Mother Goose, down to the moron.

"The Negro doctor in it, I think, is the first one of his kind on the screen who failed to come out as a quaint and curious character. I know the character. I've met dozens in Trinidad and the Barbados. I presented him honestly in my book. And the movies have miraculously presented him with the same honesty."

The guests arose to depart.

"Believe me," Lewis told them as they headed for the door, " 'Arrowsmith' is a fine picture. I am thoroughly satisfied with the way it has been handled. All of you who haven't seen it should run right over to the theatre before you write a word of this interview."

Industry Leaders Return From Coast After Studio Meetings

Will H. Hays led a large delegation returning to New York this week from Hollywood, where executives of all important companies participated in conferences regarding a new economic scheme in production.

Accompanying Hays was Joseph Breen, his executive assistant. E. W. Hammons, president of Educational, likewise returned, and so did Harry M. Warner and Sam Goldwyn.

Nicholas M. Schenck, president of MGM, and Felix Feist, Metro's sales chief, arrive in New York later this week.

DIVESTMENT OF THEATRES, FEWER FILMS RECOMMENDED BY OWNERS

Vincent's Continuing Committee Asks Hays and Other Leaders to Call "Council of War" to Alleviate Overseating

Believing overseating to be the most serious problem of the motion picture industry at its present "most crucial stage," the exhibitors' national Continuing Committee will ask President Will H. Hays of the MPPDA and other leaders of the business to call a meeting of representative producer, distributor and exhibitor groups, at which, it is proposed, producer-owner circuits will be asked to darken or relinquish to former independent owners all theatres which they have been unable to operate profitably over a period of time.

Curtailment of the total number of pictures to be produced in the future is also proposed as a corollary of the suggested theatre reduction. In the event that decision is made to place in effect these two important recommendations of the Continuing Committee, it is believed by its members that much will have been accomplished in alleviating the present economic strain on the industry.

Decentralizing Begun

Decentralization of circuit operation, which also includes relinquishment of large theatre blocks to former independent owners, has been under way for quite some time. Fox, principally in the East, Warners and Paramount have participated in this movement.

The trend toward fewer pictures has been the subject of much discussion within inner executive ranks in recent weeks.

Details of the program for a "council of war" were made known this week to MOTION PICTURE HERALD by Walter Vincent, of Wilmer and Vincent, eastern circuit, who is president of the national Continuing Committee, formed last September when exhibitors met at the Astor hotel in New York to protest MGM's sales policies of percentage playing. Seven thousand theatres were reputed to be represented at the meeting, which named, in addition to Vincent as the committee's chairman, the following exhibitor members: Nathan Yamins of Fall River, Mass.; M. A. Lightman, Memphis, president of the MPTOA; Lewen Pizor, Philadelphia, one of the prompters of the MGM protest; Charles L. O'Reilly, president of the Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce in New York City, and A. Levey of New Haven.

Following an investigation of the complaints by theatre owners against MGM's policies, the Continuing Committee under Vincent began a secret and far-reaching study of all problems now facing distributors and exhibitors, many of which difficulties are a direct outgrowth of the present economic situation existing both in general business and within the motion picture industry.

Invitations to participate in a general industry get-together now are being forwarded by the committee to theatre, sales and production executives, and a bid to sponsor and conduct the meeting was made to Will Hays on his return from Hollywood this week. Members of the committee considered the cooperation of Hays likely in view of the fact that the objectives of the proposed meeting—the reduction of theatres and curtailment of production—were subjects of discussion when Hays conferred recently in Hollywood with Nicholas Schenck, Adolph Zukor, E. W. Hammons, Joseph M. Schenck, Harry Warner, Hiram S. Brown, Carl Laemmle, Winfield Sheehan and Joseph Breen, the latter of the Hays office.

Hays' interest in the subject, and his familiarity with it as a result of the Coast conferences, in the belief of committee members, may prompt him to accept a prominent part at the proposed general meeting.

"The Continuing Committee believes that the only corrective for overseating is for circuits to discontinue operation of unprofitable theatres. We believe producers now realize the fallacy of the idea of owning theatres merely as a guarantee that all of their product will be shown. It must now be obvious to them that it is much better to have a percentage of their product exhibited at a profit than to have it all shown at an aggregate loss."—WALTER VINCENT, Chairman.

"Council of War" Urged

"At this most crucial time in the industry's history," Vincent said, "a general council of war of leaders in all branches is most essential. The Continuing Committee believes the problem of overseating to be the most serious and far-reaching in its effect on all phases of the motion picture industry, and its solution involves promise of greatest and quickest relief.

"The committee believes that the only corrective for overseating is for circuits to discontinue operation of unprofitable theatres. We believe producers now realize the fallacy of the idea of owning theatres merely as a guarantee that all of their product will be shown. It must now be obvious to them that it is much better to have a percentage of their product exhibited at a profit than to have it all shown at an aggregate loss."

Vincent added it would be suggested at the proposed industry get-together that circuits dispense with all theatres which have been operated unprofitably over a period of time, and that such theatres either be returned to independent operators or be closed.

"Many theatres now being operated at a loss merely to insure some producer an outlet for his product are nothing more than glorified stores, and should be permanently closed," Vincent said. "Circuits wanted and succeeded in acquiring too many outlets.

It may be that, in order to supply this overabundance of exhibition places, producers are now making too many pictures. If this is so, a materially reduced number of theatres in operation should result in fewer pictures, which would be of better quality, being produced with greater benefits resulting to those theatres whose past earnings have won them the right to remain in business."

The proposed general meeting and its objectives had their origin in a message to the MGM Protest Meeting authored by the MPTO of eastern Pennsylvania, southern New Jersey and Delaware, which asked, in part, that producers devote themselves to the making of better pictures rather than to the operation of neighborhood theatres which "they have demonstrated by ample proof is legitimately the field of the independent exhibitor."

Proposes That Producer-Owned Circuits Darken Houses Not Operating Profitably or Turn Them Over to Independents

Called "Costly Playthings"

"Turn these costly playthings back to the independents, who know how to operate them profitably," the message advised. "The best pictures were made several years ago when the producer had to turn out quality or stay out of the theatres, and not as at present where there is an assured outlet for pictures in producer-owned circuits. Such an outlet guarantees a showing, but does not guarantee a profit. One outstanding success followed by six 'flops' is a poor average to boast of in picture making."

The protest meeting empowered the Continuing Committee to work for elimination of the score charge, immediate adoption of the standard contract, and other programs considered beneficial to exhibitors and the industry, in designating it to continue as a negotiating body between exhibitors and distributors.

Columbia Promises Release Of Full 1931-32 Schedule

Columbia, refuting statements that major companies contemplate reduction of current feature schedules, announces that every film on the 1931-32 program will be delivered. The company claims to be ahead of its schedule for the first quarter.

Eight of the 26 features set are already completed and five others are nearing completion on the Coast. The five are: "Three Wise Girls," "The Man Who Dared," "Zelda Marsh," "Final Edition," "The Feathered Serpent."

MILTON SILVER ON COLLINS' NOTIONS

Motion Picture Ad Man Must Hit First Time or Quit, Says Universal's Advertising Head

by MILTON SILVER

The exciting discussion of motion picture advertising and its technique, which has come in sequel to MOTION PICTURE HERALD'S presentation of some notions from Mr. Kenneth Collins, executive vice president and showman-advertiser for R. H. Macy & Company, continues this week with a cheerfully assertive expression from Mr. Milton Silver, advertising manager for Universal Pictures Corporation. Mr. Silver makes his own points clear enough, but it is important to note his emphasis on the ephemeral quality of motion picture selling opportunity, and to realize, as we all must within the industry, of what slight and fragile facts the motion picture advertising man must weave his web. TERRY RAMSAYE

Time passes . . . great industries wax and wane . . . and the power of the printed word marches steadily on.

Advertising becomes more and more an exact science.

Which makes me think that it's about time motion picture advertising stepped up and took its place in the limelight as a living, breathing, virile part of this modern civilization. Motion picture advertising is conspicuous by its absence in any and all series of advertising awards for outstanding copy and layout . . . in spite of the fact that the advertising profession generally has borrowed and borrowed the merchandising and showmanship manner and method of the motion picture ad man and exploiteer.

The men who spend the motion picture money yearly do a fine merchandising job through the medium of printer's ink in the motion picture business press, in the amusement pages of the daily papers, on the billboards of the nation, and in the national magazines. And they are working with the most perishable merchandise in industry.

A picture is literally here today and gone tomorrow.

There is no time to build up consumer prestige by weight of words or volume of white space. The motion picture ad man must do his job and do it quickly! He has no time to write and revise . . . revise . . . revise. He has no time to try out campaigns . . . he has no time for research on individual products. He has to hit . . . and hit the first time or call it quits.

And he has a new product to advertise every time he starts.

The appeal is through the emotions only . . . the customer buys mostly on faith. He can't see what he buys in advance. He can't feel it . . . touch it . . . sample it. He must believe! And the advertising man's job is to make him believe that he is going to get his money's worth.

So you see every ad is a one shot ad . . . take it or leave it.

Most often the advertising matter . . . preliminary trade ads and advance theatre ads for the press books . . . is made up long before the picture is seen.

Generally the only material available for trade ads is a synopsis of the story and names of a few players in the cast and perhaps the director.

Granted that personalities are easy to sell compared with inanimate objects such as usable merchandise . . . wearing apparel . . . furniture . . . food and the like . . . consider the death struggle a man must go through trying to condense a story that takes anywhere from five to ten reels of motion picture into, say, fifty words.

Probably the clearest and most concise explanation of what the motion picture ad men are up against is this statement from Terry Ramsaye: "Blue sky—that's all."

These men must tickle the anticipatory glands of the prospective customer to such an extent that he froths at the mouth with excitement and emotion.

Even the circus man had something on the motion picture feller. He saw the animals pawing at the prison bars.

And, by the way, suppose the now almost legendary Mr. Barnum had resorted to what the moderns call "understatement." Imagine a circus poster with copy like this: "Thousands of interested people who have seen this excellent show seemed to have had a most enjoyable time. If you enjoy excitement, light and airy laughter and really astonishing stunts that at times even approach the miraculous, come and see the Barnum and Bailey big show. We believe you'll like it and have a good time."

On the other hand, suppose we insert a little dash of humor into a dramatic motion picture with a headline as follows, "YOU CAN'T TELL THE PLAYERS WITHOUT A SCORECARD," to tie up with the football season. Then underneath, your copy starts something like this: "There's no rhyme or reason why we made this picture . . . but the people seem to like it . . . seats are selling like a batch of Mrs. Child's hot cakes, it's that popular. Come on down to the Mayfair and try to get in."

But to get back to the original premise. The motion picture clientele is a cross section of the world rather than any specialized group or groups. The ad man has no following to cater to . . . no two pictures are alike . . . therefore each must be handled in a different manner. Yesterday's advertising on a "Street Scene" or "Free Soul" or a "Frankenstein" is no help at all in selling "Palmy Days" or a "Champ" or a "Strictly Dishonorable." Every picture must stand on its own legs. And always the motion picture ad man is confronted with the need to hurry . . . and the fact that his public lives on promises. Besides, this is a business, and merchandise MUST be sold at a profit. Fashion is a hard taskmaster in the clothing business, the furniture business, the radio business and even in the food line, but there is no harder taskmaster extant than a public that will not go to see this week's picture next week. Which is why certain Broadway houses pack them in at previews.

Every first run motion picture represents an investment of about a quarter of a million dollars . . . and with each succeeding day after the first run houses play it, its value decreases.

And there are no bargains . . . no lead merchandise . . . no "marked downs."

The life of a motion picture in any one spot is very short, and there is no such thing as procuring a copy or a model for late comers. You must get your audience into the theatre while your advertising is hot, then make room for the next one.

There must be emotion approximating hysteria in the copy, because the appeal is entirely to the emotions . . . and emotion usually leads to overstatement rather than understatement!

The large motion picture companies, of which there are seven, produce an average of forty features a year each . . . forty different pieces of remarkably perishable property each year . . . each piece of property costing between $150,000 and $1,000,000 (a total annual production for these seven big companies of approximately $150,000,000). And once a picture is finished, it's finished! . . . the public takes it or not, as its fancy dictates.

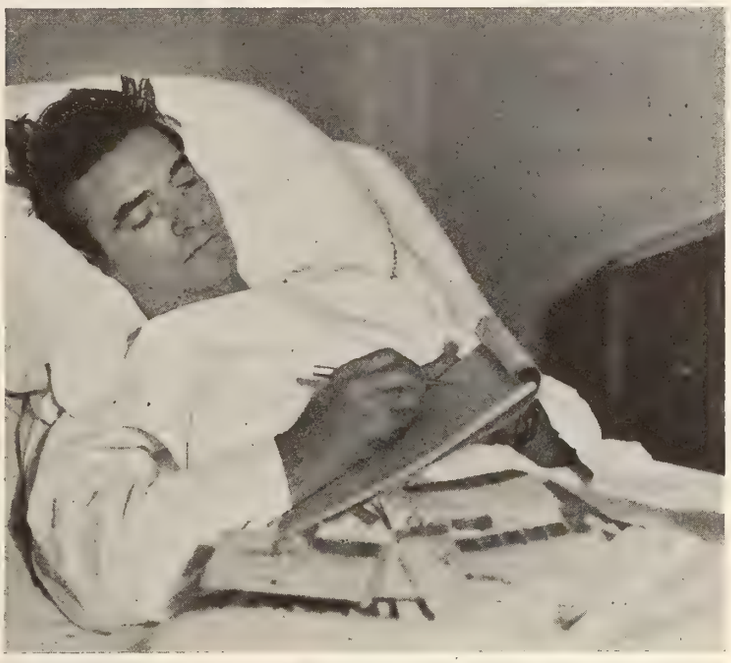
And sheer beauty of layout or literary style means nothing . . . sheer beauty of copy means nothing. Every single piece of advertising copy is a dramatic effort that must stand alone.

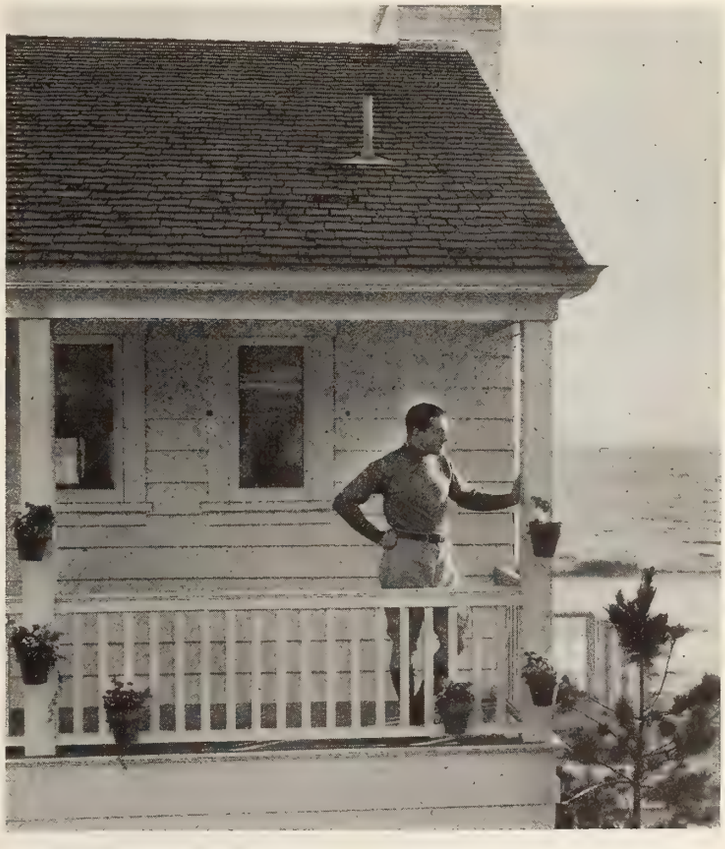
The message must be smashed across in the twinkling of an eye. There is no time to take up the slack . . . all is written so that he who runs, reads or passes it by. The competition is keen . . . probably the keenest competition in the realm of merchandising.

And a lot of good work is done nevertheless.

And I say that frequently out of all the hack work and all the hit or miss stuff that is daily ground out of the m. p. ad mill, a piece of copy stands out . . . a layout stands out . . . a campaign stands out bold enough to take its place right up front with the best that comes out of the straight commercial advertising shops. And I say that because of this job the m. p. men are doing, always under pressure, always with the knowledge that it must hit or lose; I say motion picture advertising is a vital part of advertising and deserves a real place and honest recognition by the advertising profession as an institution.



THE CAMERA REPORTS



HIGHLIGHTS. Among the shadows of a corner in one of the Warner sound studio buildings, Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., and Joan Blondell find a chatting place while awaiting the director's call. And there the still man found them one day while they were working together in "Union Depot."

MR. RUTH, ACTOR. A brand new portrait study of George Herman Ruth, without the royal robes or the mighty scepter of the King of Swat, instead a rather handsome celebrity of the photoplay. Ruth has just completed a series for Universal on baseball—inside stuff.

FIGHTING FOR HEALTH. Tom Mix answers as many as he can of the hundreds of letters wishing him a speedy recovery from his illness. Mix was ready to return to the screen, in a series of Universal Westerns, when he was stricken in Hollywood with acute appendicitis.

A COTTAGE BY THE SEA. Not long ago this department presented Richard Barthelmess frowning over plans at a desolate spot on the Pacific. Here is the spot, all covered over with the First National star's new Malibu Beach home. And a look of proud ownership has replaced the frown.

SON OF CATHAY. As if to prove his prodigious versatility, Edward G. Robinson assumes this guise in his latest role, that of a hatchet man (what a pleasant title!) in First National's "The Honorable Mr. Wong."

FURTIVE EPISODE. In the forthcoming Fox production, "Circumstance." This shot was considered for last issue's "Still of the Month," and this is a kind of honorable mention. Alexander Kirkland is shown. The cast is headed by Violet Heming and Ralph Bellamy.

MOTION PICTURE MINDED. Sydney and Charles, Jr., sons of Charles Chaplin and Lita Grey Chaplin, having some fun with the Fox Movietone sound recording equipment aboard the Ile de France, as it took them to Europe to resume their education. Both mother and grandmother were fellow-passengers.

BEFORE THE NEXT SCENE. A study of the new motion picture, as exemplified in the actor who pauses to brush up on his lines beside a giant lamp. Specifically, John Boles before going into action in "Good Sport," Fox production.

Small Town Leads The Way As Relief Returns Increase

The small town of Nevada, Mo., with a population of only 7,500 led the way this week as later returns on the Motion Picture Week for the benefit of the nation's unemployed came in from towns and cities over the country. Generally considered a record for the United States, Nevada turned over for administration the sum of $2,520, contributed by only two theatres. Midnight performances were given by the Star, Fox Midland house and the Arbo.

Jersey City, with three de luxe houses, Loew's Jersey City, Skouras State and Warners Stanley, and 13 neighborhood theatres offering benefit performances, raised a total of $31,178.40. Jack Keale of the State and George H. Dumond of Loew's directed the showings, with the de luxers charging $25 for loge seats, $2 for orchestra and balcony, and the neighborhoods pricing their seats at $1.

Other late figures included: Memphis, Tenn., $4,765; Houston, $1,258.50 with eight downtown theatres giving shows; Greater Miami, $1,519, with 13 houses contributing. Some 80 Iowa theatres anticipate a gross exceeding $10,000, with certain performances still to be held. The Rinzler & Frisch Theatres organization in Brooklyn, N. Y., turned over to the committee $2,348, collected at its several box offices.

Multicolor Goes in For Black-and-White

A deal with Joseph M. Schenck to handle United Artists' prints this week launched Howard Hughes' Multicolor organization into the black-and-white field. Heretofore, it had concentrated exclusively on color prints. Consolidated has been doing U. A.'s laboratory work.

Citing net earnings of Multicolor for October at $1,379, with an equally good showing expected for November, Hughes declared that "the concern has weathered a financial crisis and is now on a firm footing under the new management headed by Frank Garbutt."

Sennett To Produce 15 Reel Comedy With Numerous Stars

Mack Sennett plans immediate production of a feature comedy, to cost approximately $300,000 and which he plans to roadshow throughout the country. The feature will be 15 reels in length, and was decided upon by Sennett after Motion Picture Herald's "Fifteen Box Office Champions" indicated that comedy is favored by the majority of film patrons.

Nine major stars are possibly scheduled for the feature, headed by Charles E. Mack, of the team of Moran and Mack. Sennett hopes to include in the cast Clara Bow, Lupez Velez, Jean Harlow, Dorothy Burgess, Edmund Lowe, W. C. Fields, Roscoe Ates, Andy Clyde, Mack Swain, Ben Turpin and Lloyd Hamilton. Sennett will direct the picture himself.

FOX STUDIO HEADS STAY, SAYS TINKER

Sheehan Will Concentrate on Production, Wurtzel Is Business Manager and D. E. McIntyre Will Work With Both

"Production executives of Fox Film Corporation in Hollywood have been entrusted with the task of reorganizing their own studio affairs and problems to a high point of efficiency, without intrusion of the management in New York," said Edward R. Tinker, Fox president, on Wednesday, in answer to the many wild reports which this week forecast a complete revision of important executives on the West Coast.

Tinker stated that he is unaware of actual details pertaining to changes in the personnel of studio workers, but denied most vigorously the reports which said that the corporation intended to change its topnotch executive staff at the studio.

"Winnie Sheehan still is the boss," he said, "and will remain so."

Hollywood reports said that Sol Wurtzel had been relieved of all production duties to become business manager of the studio properties, with Sheehan concentrating on actual production. D. E. McIntyre, explained Tinker, has been assigned to the studio to work with Sheehan and Wurtzel in coordinating effort to a new stage of efficiency.

All at Movietone City

"The boys in Hollywood have taken off their coats, rolled up their sleeves and gone to work as they have never worked before," Tinker said. "Daily they hold conferences which result in more efficient operation. These conferences and the decisions arrived at are for the betterment of the organization and are not influenced by the management in New York. As a matter of fact, I was unaware until yesterday of their decision to concentrate all production at Movietone City. They wired me of their suggestion to abandon the Western Avenue studio on Tuesday, and following my okay, proceeded to move to Movietone City immediately."

On New Year's Day, all of Fox's Coast production activities will be centered at Movietone City. At present, the company operates a plant at Western avenue and one at the City. The decision to eliminate the old lot is the most important economy move of the new regime under Tinker.

Commencing immediately, all studio equipment will be moved from Western avenue, the transfer to be completed by January 1. New buildings will not be erected at Movietone City, but, where necessary, stages will be drafted to care for the additional executive personnel.

The property on Western avenue is valued at between $3,000,000 and $5,000,000, and it is the intention of Fox officials to liquidate it into cash as quickly as is possible.

Tinker said that he is unaware of a reported plan for readjustment of the financial structure of General Theatres Equipment, which is the holding company of the various Fox interests.

The report in the New York Herald-Tribune stated that "discussions are taking place looking toward the formulation of some plan of readjustment of General Theatres Equipment Corporation and the Fox Theatres Corporation.

"Bankers have taken no action with regard to the parent company or to Fox Films, all obligations having thus far been met punctually or extended by mutual agreement, but the present phase of the depression has affected the current fiscal position of General Theatres much as other amusement enterprises have been affected and it is expected that some plan for assisting the corporation will have to be drawn up.

Biggest Interest in Fox

"The biggest interest of General Theatres lies in Fox Film and Fox Theatres and, owing to the fact that the two Fox units are not paying dividends on their common shares, the earnings of the parent company have been sharply reduced. A decline in theatre attendance in this country and the depreciation of the pound sterling have been the principal factors present in the decline of earnings of the subsidiaries."

Tinker gave no coloration of support to the many rumors which have stated that his election to the presidency of the Fox corporations is of a temporary nature.

Radio Board Sees Television Distant

The Federal Radio Commission, in its annual report just presented to Congress, stated that although television had made great strides in the past year, it had not yet reached the point where the commission will recognize commercial possibilities in visual broadcasting.

Dr. Alfred N. Goldsmith, RCA vice-president and general manager, in an address before the Radio Servicemen's Association, Philadelphia, predicted this week that before the end of 1932 electrical entertainment in the home would be augmented by television and apparatus for the projection of sound motion pictures.

Philadelphia Sets Admission Tax; To Be Delayed Until '33

Consternation has spread through the ranks of Philadelphia exhibitors as a result of the surprise move of the city council's special commission, which suddenly slapped a two-cent admission tax on the theatres.

Temporary relief followed closely upon the announcement, when it was revealed the imposition could not be made effective until 1933, owing to difficulties attendant upon collection. Opportunity for compromise negotiations will be afforded theatre men in several hearings.

USE OF ADVERTISING IN NEWSREEL BRINGS BITTER DEBATE IN BRITAIN

General Council of Exhibitors' Association Backed by Members in Resisting Any Indication of Propaganda in Pictures

By WM. H. MOORING, London

Is it possible to produce a newsreel which, while containing current matter of general public interest, is still entirely free from suggestions of propaganda?

The question is precipitated by discussions recently started by the General Council of the Cinematograph Exhibitors Association here. This Council has the pretty general backing of its Association members in resisting the introduction into newsreels of anything suspected to be propagandist.

Heated Controversy

The recent General Parliamentary election has brought to a head a heated controversy which was bound sooner or later to arise. Yet there can be no serious suggestion that during that campaign the producers of newsreels engaged in plugging political propaganda in favor of any one party or section of opinion.

British Fox Movietone, Paramount, Pathe and Gaumont all featured speeches by political leaders, and shots of local campaign matter. Short of doing so could they have been regarded as newsreels, since the function of the picture news service is to pass on news, in just the same way as the press does by the printed word?

No insistence was laid on any particular policy; it is not one of the complaints arising against the reel companies that they embarked upon a "sides-taking" business with any ulterior motives.

Ran Speeches of Both Sides

On the contrary, in spite of the fact that Fox Movietone News is controlled partly by Rothermere who runs a powerful group of national papers—all supporting during this election the return of Conservative candidates—this reel actually ran with speeches from leading figures of the opposing forces.

The film newsreels were as impartial during the General election as the British Broadcasting Corporation itself, for just as speeches of every conceivable flavor were put over the ether, so were they put across the screen.

Clearly if the move against propaganda is carried to its logical conclusion the development of the newsreel is impeded and its full significance reduced to fragments.

What is to be the deciding factor between propaganda and public interest? Who is to be responsible for tracing that very fine line which divides box-office from "bologna"?

Presumably objections to propagandist tendencies in films, whether newsreels or features, are based upon the dangers, inherent in such things, of causing public offense. The picture public, it is said, buy theatre tickets to see entertainment. It could be said just as truthfully of the man buying his daily newspaper that his purchase is actuated by desire to read news.

Yet he has become accustomed, by long trial, to read in his news-sheet the most frankly propagandist material that writers can devise, and to see occasionally a picture of his public hero almost alongside that of the one man or woman he hates most in public life.

The newsreader has been educated to expect light and shade in his daily news. Can he not be educated to look for the same thing in his theatre newsreel?

The problem goes so deep that to lop away the malignant attachments would be to cut out the heart of the very thing it is desired to restore to purity and health. The question is whether the public is being consulted in the matter at all, or whether theatre owners are not too inclined to assume that what they think their public wants that must it have. On the same slender basis there rests a general objection to advertisements in feature films.

What Should Producer Do?

There are obviously times when certain forms of advertising such as poster boards and theatre lights are legitimately the subject of exploitation in films. What in these circumstances are the producers to do? Must they use "code" ads to satisfy the exhibitors and the public that they are not receiving any payment for them?

Or may they use recognizable ads, familiar to the minds of the public, and thus make for greater realism as well as earning useful cash contributions to the cost of the film?

The argument the British exhibitor seems disposed to put up, is that the ads if used in circumstances such as these must not be truly propagandist, therefore they must be "code" ads, for which the producer cannot charge a bean.

This attitude clearly is due to lack of understanding between the producer and the vendor of films. The exhibitor cannot trust the producer not to abuse the acceptance of "ad plugging" as a principle.

They fear that the ingenuity of the producer might soon be strained in cramming every screen story with publicity angles to the ultimate exclusion of entertainment values.

It is regrettable that lack of common understanding should deprive the industry, in these times, of useful sources of additional revenue, which subject to certain safeguards seem capable of development to the final and decided advantage of all sections of the industry. This line of reasoning can certainly be applied even more to newsreels than to features.

Annual meeting of the National Fire Protection Association will be held in Atlantic City during the week beginning May 8. New regulations governing installation and operation of motion picture equipment will be discussed.

Locals Turn Down Canavan Plan for Operator Pay Cut

Union locals affiliated with the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees and Motion Picture Machine Operators rejected President William Canavan's proposal for a 36 weeks' salary rebate which, it was estimated, would have saved theatre owners $1,000,000 had it been placed in effect. No alternate proposal is contemplated by Canavan, and at the union headquarters in New York it was regarded as unlikely that even those locals which favored the plan would proceed with individual rebate programs inasmuch as Canavan's proposal was contingent upon the approval of a majority of locals nationally.

It was suggested at union headquarters, by way of explanation of the action of affiliated locals, that the ten weeks' salary rebates made last summer, together with the large number of downward adjustments of union scales which were made with the drafting of new labor contracts in September, brought about the rejection of the proposal for further concessions. It was necessary for a majority of the 698 locals affiliated with the IATSE to approve the plan in order to make it effective nationally. Fewer than 100 locals voted in favor of the proposed rebates.

Canavan's proposal, worked out in conjunction with directors of the International, contemplated rebates of 10 per cent on salaries of $45 to $70 a week, and 15 per cent on salaries above $70. The rebates would have remained effective for a minimum of 36 weeks from December 12, affecting 25,000 theatre employees. The proposal was signalized by exhibitor organizations as a "fortunate gesture" which would have a "stabilizing effect" on exhibitors.

Warns Against Possible Suits

Austin C. Keough, Paramount Publix counsel, has issued a warning, via the house organ, "Publix Opinion," to all house managers that care must be taken in the avoidance of such mistakes and omissions as may lead to lawsuits, with their attendant expense and waste.

Keough notes a great improvement, recently, in the manner in which managers have handled matters with a legal aspect or which may lead to legal controversy. He indicates, however, that numerous instances still come to attention, which prove the necessity of continued vigilance.

Two possibilities pointed out are the condition of theatre seats, where damage to clothing may result in small, but troublesome lawsuits, and the matter of maintaining order by exercising care in the event of necessary ejection of a patron. A suit for false arrest may result from failure to use discretion, Keough warns.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

A PEP meeting was in progress at headquarters of an important organization. One executive spoke at length on the necessity of confidence, concluding his remarks with the following:

"A confirmed drinker awakened one morning to find a ferocious animal sitting at the foot of the bed sharpening its claws. The soak, at first paralyzed with fear, finally regained his composure and said to his most unwelcome visitor:

"'You'd better do some deep thinking before you pitch into me. If you start getting rough, I'm going to take a couple of aspirins and sober up. Then where in hell will you be?'"

Congratulations to Rex Bell and to Clara Bow, Hollywood's newest newlyweds. We assume that they are newlyweds, although extremely conflicting statements emanating from each late last week with regards the very existence of a marital state were the cause of much speculation generally. All of which reminds us of several much publicized affairs in which Miss Bow participated quite some time ago, including, particularly, the headline romance with Harry Richman. Even Harry admitted this week that he and Clara "were thrown at each other by publicity men." All in an attempt to help along Miss Bow's career in motion pictures. The result was a general tirade against Miss Bow and films by newspapers of the country, which brought no good to either faction.

Again, congratulations, and bearing in mind that the former "IT" girl of the screen is about to stage a comeback after a lengthy absence, we remind her: This marriage business had better be the "McCoy."

Out Hollywood way, our friend Joe Poland is retelling the yarn which involves a financial discussion between Joe Schenck and Charlie Chaplin. Charlie insisted that he is an artist and knows nothing of money matters, which brought a broad smile to Schenck who concluded the chat with this: "Charlie, you know all you need to know about finances. You've reached your present place by using just one line: 'I won't take less'."

Hollywood's present reconstruction of economic and studio forces is reported in London's Film Review in this manner:

"Film producers of the United States are now engaged, for the most part, in making pictures that cost a good deal less than those made in the early part of the year.

"In the process of reduction it was found that a big number of jobs were held by expensively paid men who never produced anything!"

The reason Mr. William Fox denies any connection with the new Aaron Fox Film Corporation, producer-distributor-circuit unit now in process of formation, may be explained quite easily. We do not mean to imply, however, that William is interested, merely mentioning the reason just in case.

A contract with Fox Film Corporation prevents him from publicly or privately participating in any film venture until 1935, violation of which would cost him $18,000,000, representing the sum paid by Harley Clarke for Fox's holdings in the various Fox Corporations.

EARLIER this year, the president of a national distributing company complimented himself immeasurably upon the acquisition of a bright young chap as his executive assistant. Two more months and the young chap will be the executive and his present chief the assistant.

Not what is read, but what is understood.
Not what is understood, but what is believed.

The following appears in a regional trade publication as an introduction to a current feature story:

> "Al Sherman is motion picture editor of The Morning Telegraph, the leading daily of its kind. Recently he made a trip to Hollywood. Some of his reactions are included in this article."

Which convinces us that Al—our pal—is considerably greater as a rapid-fire genius and quick-trigger reporter than we had expected. Of this there can be no doubt when we take into consideration the fact that Al arrived in Hollywood early one morning three or four months ago and hurriedly departed 24 hours later. It was in this record short stay that Al gleaned sufficient of Hollywood's inner workings with which to pen those many and divers "reactions."

Motion picture bankers take note!

THE TENDENCY to reduce score charges on rentals has been most pronounced in recent months. Practically all distributors have made concessions, except one, which still insists upon the payment of substantial fees for sound scores. But now, with the downward revision gaining momentum rapidly, this particular company finds itself face to face with the bare, cold fact that it must cut—or else. And so, beginning immediately, the distributor will reduce score charges on rentals to circuits, if and when the various circuits present the company with contractual evidence that other distributors have done likewise.

Threatening taxation of theater tickets by the federal government brings to mind the time, many years ago, when the industry found itself unnecessarily overburdened with taxes which grew out of the late World war. Exhibitors everywhere were fed up with the demands made on theatre box offices, contributing $167,000,000 yearly on a 10 per cent tax until Mike O'Toole, Sydney Cohen and George Aarons, of the MPTOA, together with its lively counsel, Jimmy (now Mayor James) Walker, called at Washington upon one Andrew Mellon.

The group discussed the situation fully two hours, at the end of which Mike, "Syd," George and Jimmy unsold Mellon so completely that he immediately placed in motion machinery which lifted $160,000,000 annually from the shoulders of overtaxed exhibitors.

Loew's Midland Theatre in Kansas City is minus its parrot. Manager John McManus advances the theory that someone in K. C. is evidently fond of parrot meat.

The parrot, a fixture of the lobby since the Midland was opened four years ago, was bought by Marcus Loew at the time the late founder of Loew's, Inc., purchased a flock of these birds at $75 each.

The Midland parrot swore like a sailor and when exposed to a strong light could give a long-winded harangue the like of which could hardly be equaled even by a division manager after an inspection of theatres.

GIVE WHAT THEY WANT

And It Is Pointed Out That Only One Sophisticated, Sexy Picture Placed in HERALD Champions List

By DANIEL A. LORD, S.J.

The author of the accompanying article is a Jesuit Father who has an experienced and expert viewpoint on theatrical entertainment. He is editor of the magazine "Queens Work," devotes much time to organization efforts among young people throughout the United States and has long been a keen student of motion pictures. He has spent considerable time in Hollywood making first-handed examination of production affairs.

"Give the people what they want!"

That has been the cry of every entertainment expert from the days when they threw Christians to the lions and killed off a thousand gladiators to make a Roman holiday.

And it is the cry that echoes as clearly as ever over the theatres, legitimate and motion picture, of our country.

We have heard that cry repeated so frequently in recent years by those who made motion pictures, that we rather wondered just what the people did want. During the past year and a half, the producers seemed rather sure that they wanted sophistication, sex, gangland, mystery, crime. At least one would judge this not merely by the type of films actually produced in certain instances but by the advertising used to promise the films to the exhibitor.

Then Come 15 Box-Office Champions

We have had gangster films without counting. Constance Bennett was announced as getting $300,000 for 10 weeks' work, producing her fallen-women, sophisticated, sexy stories. Crime was of cardinal interest. Problem stories dealing with broken marriages, divorce, free love, promiscuity came in rapid and lurid succession.

Then MOTION PICTURE HERALD announced the list of the 15 Box Office Champions, and I, like thousands of others, read what the people really want, and read with surprise.

Of the entire fifteen, just one is the sophisticated, sexy picture. Constance Bennett does not rate a single picture, nor does Joan Crawford. More astonishing still, even the glamorous Greta Garbo fails to lift her soiled ladies into the sacred list of leaders. And though we were overwhelmed with gangland pictures, only one of them, and that a picture in which the gangster was anything in the world but a hero, "Little Caesar," ranks among the first fifteen.

Instead we find the popular films led by the smashing, open-air, two-gun, outdoor, comedy-melodrama, "Cimarron." We find close on its heels "Trader Horn," as far removed from the tea-passing, slightly cynical, morally loose picture, as Africa is from a Long Island swimming pool.

We find that the people much prefer laughter to satire, and are much more interested in dieting, politics, the popular radio stars than they are in divorce, free love, scrambled husbands and wives. Marie Dressler takes three of the fifteen leaders: "Politics," "Reducing" and "Min and Bill." Charlie Chaplin comes through with a silent picture, in the midst of the blast and blare of sound, and packs the theatre. Will Rogers, certainly not what you'd call a sophisticate, outdraws the handsomest heroes. Amos and Andy take high place with "Check and Double Check."

"The audiences are too sophisticated nowadays," we are told. Maybe. But not too sophisticated to push Janet Gaynor's "Daddy Long Legs" (an unsophisticated story if one was ever written) and "The Man Who Came Back" into top notch places.

Comedy again crashed through with "Animal Crackers" as action, action, action fills the theatre for "Hell's Angels," a success in spite of the most childish story offered to the public last year and a heroine whose posturings made Broadway audiences laugh out loud. "Morocco," with outdoors, French Legion (thought long since played to death), action, Gary Cooper, and the heavily exploited Dietrich, rates. And the lone sophisticate on the Sacred 15 is "Strangers May Kiss."

It rather looks as if the public had spoken and spoken loud and long. Where on the list are the expensive Broadway hits bought at such tremendous cost and cleaned up as far as they could be cleaned? Where are the best selling problem novels with their discussion of sex and crime? The ballots seem to have been thrown in at the box office for outdoors, comedy, simple drama, sweetness, beauty, cleanness. There is something amusing about Marie Dressler laughing her way to eminence, a triple eminence, over Constance Bennett, Greta Garbo, Joan Crawford. There is something significant that only one of the successes, "Animal Crackers," had been seen on the Broadway stage.

B. O. Speaks for Cleanness

There is no laughing away the bleak, bare spaces in the motion picture theatres of the present. Depression will hardly explain why rotten plays are popping like rotten eggs on Broadway and sophisticated, sexy films hardly get a mention in the fifteen best money-getters the year has seen.

Perhaps the people don't want sex. Perhaps after all they prefer simplicity and sincerity to sophistication. Perhaps they would rather have comedy in preference to crime. Perhaps even the producers have not been quite right all the time about just what the people do want.

There is, in every theatre, a great open mouthed oracle that sits in solemn judgment on every film. That is the great god, Box Office. It seems to me as it must have seemed to the other thousands who read the HERALD's Box Office Champions, that the great god, Box Office, has spoken rather emphatically in favor of cleanness, humor, outdoor drama, laughter, pure love. He had little to say about problem plays, crime dramas, sex films.

Westerns Seen Strong As Ever In Des Moines

Westerns are just as popular as ever, and continue to draw well with the youngsters at the theatres in Des Moines which play especially to the children trade, according to Al Yarowsky, veteran of Des Moines theatre operation. On films noted as for the family, children account for 25 per cent of the audience and in small towns they regularly are 15 per cent of the patrons. Comedies and westerns are still the favorites of the youngsters, says Yarowsky.

Five Des Moines houses average at least 15 per cent child attendance with higher figures where features are shown particularly for children. All theatres find juvenile attendance on a par with previous years.

Bob Sheridan, who put over the Children's Theatre in New York and other spots, will shortly launch plans for children's matinees in Des Moines. Action features and selected comedies will form the nucleus of the programs.

Warners Belittle Receiver Charges of Mystery Holder

Warner Brothers' executives, through the corporation's New York home office publicity department, issued the following statement on Wednesday.

"Word has just been received at the offices of Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., that one Jules Endler has filed a petition for a receiver in the Chancery Court in Delaware claiming to be a stockholder of the company. Former Federal Judge Hugh M. Morris of Wilmington has been retained to represent the corporation. The complainant is not a stockholder of record of this company. From the information at hand it is apparent that there is no merit to the claim and the allegations made in the petition are not true in fact. The basis of the petition is that the Corporation cannot meet its maturing obligations. This is untrue as the company is paying all bills promptly and taking advantage of cash discounts. The company has no bank loans and has large cash balances."

Announcement comes from Wilmington, Del., that stockholders of Warner Brothers' Pictures will be asked to approve a reduction of the stated book value of the company's no-par value common stock to $5 per share at the annual meeting there on Monday, at the offices of the Corporation Trust Company.

As of August 1 last, the book value of the corporation's common stock was $22.25 per share. Directors for the ensuing year will also be elected at Monday's meeting. This move by Warners is noted at the home office as merely a "bookkeeping" maneuver, having no effect whatever on the stock involved.

A Personal Pledge To Showmen from S. R. KENT.

Experience has taught me that it is foolish to rave about every picture that looks like a hit. But when a picture comes along that has definite outstanding showmanship qualities, down-to-earth audience appeal and timeliness, I MUST tell you about it. I am referring to "SOOKY".

JACKIE COOPER

directed by NORMAN TAUROG adapted from the book

I have just screened this wonderful picture, before an audience of grown-ups, and I want to tell you it is a long, long time since I have been so enthusiastic over any picture as I am over "SOOKY". Not only will it build tremendous grosses for you, but it comes to you at a time when you can profit to the utmost on its qualities.*

You will get "SOOKY" during Christmas holidays.

"SOOKY"

"DEAR SOOKY" by PERCY CROSBY

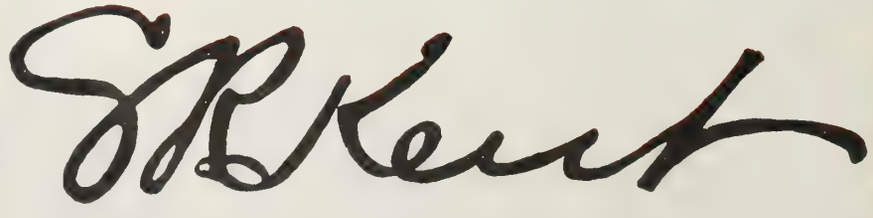
"SOOKY" is by no means a kid picture. It is ENTERTAINMENT for EVERYONE! Compared with "Skippy" even, "SOOKY" proves vastly superior in entertainment and box-office power. You did good business on "Skippy". It is my prediction you will do SENSATIONAL business with "SOOKY". You have the same money-making cast and director as in "Skippy."



Add to that the increased popularity of Jackie Cooper, who has taken the country by storm in every picture in which he has appeared—plus real laughs, strong heart-tugs, an absorbing story, pathos and excellent comedy. The people I was with actually cried while they laughed.

See your Paramount branch manager and screen this picture. Then get behind it with everything, because "SOOKY" means real money.

SHORTS OF THREE AND FOUR REELS PLANNED BY THE BIG PRODUCERS

More Than 20 Productions in Next Few Months Will Test Value as One Solution of Double Feature Problem

With three major producers of short subjects about to launch production of three and four-reel shorts, a decisive test of the value of such productions as substitutes for a second feature in double featuring strongholds will soon be made possible. Upon the success or failure of such programs rests the future of double featuring, producers believe.

Definite plans for the production of an experimental number of three and four-reel shorts have been formulated by Educational, Columbia and Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and will make available more than 20 such productions within the next few months. Similar plans may be formulated by other short subject producers when 1932-33 production plans are discussed.

Plans for six comedies of three or four reels were completed by Educational during the studio visit of E. W. Hammons, president, during the past two weeks. Mack Sennett will produce the sextet, the first of which will be an Andy Clyde. Regardless of the success or failure of the experimental six as substitutes for second features on double feature programs, Educational will henceforth maintain a policy of permitting future productions to run in accordance with the value of the story, regardless of the length of the completed picture, Hammons announced on his return to New York. In other words, no steadfast studio rule confining shorts to one or two reels will be followed in the future in cases where story values legitimately warrant longer productions.

Such a policy has been maintained in the past by MGM at the Hal Roach studios, and will be continued, according to Fred Quimby, MGM short subject sales manager. The policy will result in approximately half of the 40 Roach pictures running to lengths of three or four reels, according to Quimby, who pointed out that already four of eight Charlie Chase comedies have been three reelers, two of eight Boy Friend comedies have run to three reels, and four of eight Laurel and Hardy's have run in excess of two reels, with their latest, "Beau Hunks," running four reels.

Quimby estimated that half of the Roach comedies ran over two reels last year, and said that the same general average would be maintained in the future due to the studio policy of permitting shorts to run to the full value of the script, without regard to arbitrary footage restrictions.

Columbia, this week, announced that it would distribute six travelogues of three and four-reel length, which will be made by Wafilms. The "featurettes" will be utilized primarily as a basis for Columbia's experiments in reducing short subject sales losses in double featuring strongholds.

Universal discussed production of shorts of increased length during the studio visit of Phil Reisman, company sales manager. Reisman, who returned to New York this week, said that no definite plans had resulted from the discussions, and that a production decision would await further study of the demands for three and four-reel shorts.

Reisman said that the four reel comedy, "First to Fight," with Slim Summerville, had been produced purely as an experiment to determine the box office value of productions of that length. He reported that Universal is still undecided, despite the fact that "First to Fight" was a financially successful venture.

Lou Diamond, assistant to Emanuel Cohen, in charge of Paramount short subjects, said that Paramount had not discussed production plans for 1932-33 as yet, but that some study of the advisability of increasing the length of short subjects would undoubtedly be made at the proper time.

Vitaphone's plans, according to Norman Moray, sales manager, are in the same status as Paramount's. Production plans have not yet been discussed but the subject of three and four reel shorts will very likely be included in production confabs, he said.

RKO's plans could not be determined, due to the absence from the city of Abe Schnitzer, short subject sales manager.

The producers' experiments in increasing the length of short subjects are traceable directly to the admittedly serious encroachment of double features on short subject sales. Balked in their efforts to regulate double featuring and to curtail its spread, distributors recently abandoned the attempt after receiving opinions that the legality of uniform action was uncertain. It was held that attempts to regulate or eliminate double featuring must proceed from exhibitors.

Producers, however, may now offer the key to the solution of double featuring, as it is obvious that product shortages, already pronounced in areas where double featuring is widespread, can be met only with the playing of additional short subjects. Where the demand for a double feature program is insistent, substitutions for a second feature may be advantageously offered with three and four reel productions in place of a second full length feature, it was pointed out. Such a program would still leave room for one and two reel subjects.

Price wars, already raging in Chicago and other hotbeds of double featuring, may also be corrected by availability of three and four reel subjects, according to distributor opinion. Advance-run houses, distributors point out, could play the featurettes as part of their programs, leaving the less diversified double feature programs to the subsequent-runs, thus avoiding unequal competitive programs and averting the inclination to cut prices.

In advancing this opinion, M-G-M, among other distributors, revealed that "Beau Hunks" is being advertised with the same amount of newspaper space as are the features with which it is being played, with exceptionally satisfactory results. In six cities in which the Laurel and Hardy comedy was so exploited, record grosses resulted, providing ample proof that short subjects of extended length of this type will more than compensate for a second full length feature of mediocre quality. This four-reeler is being delivered by Metro to accounts which have booked the series of eight Laurel and Hardys with no extra money booking deal involved.

Thus, advance-runs are enabled to forego a second full length picture, leaving them available for secondary runs where desired.

Educational will follow the same policy in its experimental program of six extended length comedies, and will offer only "name" attractions with an assured drawing power. This policy will be followed in an attempt to break down the resistance of first-runs to pictures which would revolutionize established running time of first-run programs. Believing that first-run bookings are essential to the financial success of extended length shorts the "name" attractions will be designed particularly to break down what Hammons describes as "moth-eaten traditions of first-run theatres on running time and established programs."

"There is no reason," said Hammons, "why a place on first-run programs could not be found for three and four reel subjects. Only an antiquated and thoroughly unsound tradition stipulates that first-run programs should be confined to a specific running time. The sooner the tradition is discredited the better it will be for theatre business."

Metro makes the same contention and points to the satisfactory program and box office results being recorded by "Beau Hunks," playing in conjunction with "Around the World in 80 Minutes" at the Rivoli, New York.

"Increasingly Brighter"

"The motion picture world is finding conditions increasingly brighter," according to George Weiss, Pacific Coast manager for Warner theatres, in San Francisco this week on an inspection tour. "Business on the west coast is decidedly on the upgrade," Weiss continued. "This last quarter has shown a fine improvement in theatre attendance."

THREE SUITS PENDING ON ANTI-TRUST DOCKET

Only Two Important Cases Involved in Fiscal Year Were Arbitration and Credit Committee Rulings

Herald Washington Bureau

With its anti-trust docket fairly well cleaned up, the Department of Justice had only three film suits pending at the close of the last fiscal year on June 30, it is disclosed by the annual report of the attorney general to Congress at the opening December 7.

Motion picture antitrust activities of the department during the year, it is shown, involved only two cases of importance to the industry as a whole—the arbitration and credit committee suits.

"In Paramount Famous Lasky Corporation et al. vs. United States," the attorney general reported, "defendants appealed from the final decree of the district court at New York City, holding that it was illegal and an undue restraint of trade for the large motion picture producers to coerce their customers, principally motion picture distributors, by jointly refusing to deal with them, and by this means of enforcing the socalled compulsory arbitration clause stipulated in standard contracts between producers and exhibitors. The case was argued and a decision rendered by the supreme court affirming the decree of the district court.

First National Decree

"In United States vs. First National Pictures (Inc) et al., the Government appealed to the supreme court from the decision of the district court dismissing its petition alleging a conspiracy to restrain trade in motion picture films, through the instrumentality of credit committees of the film boards of trade, which compelled the performance of uncompleted contracts entered into by the previous owners or operators of motion picture theatres. The appeal was argued, and the supreme court reversed the decree of the district court and remanded the case for further proceedings in conformity with the opinion. Further hearing was had before the district court and a final decree on mandate entered."

Two other cases were disposed of during the year, it is shown. In United States vs. Fox Theatres Corporation et al., a consent decree was entered by the district court at New York adjudging the acquisition by the Fox interests of certain stock in their competitor, Loew's, a violation of the Clayton Act, and a supplemental decree was later entered appointing three disinterested trustees to act until the completion of the ultimate divestment of such stock as directed by the final decree. In United States vs. West Coast Theatres et al., begun and terminated during the year, a consent decree was entered by the district court at Los Angeles, granting the relief sought by the Government in its petition charging a conspiracy to monopolize and to restrain interstate trade in motion picture films.

Cases pending at the close of the fiscal year were reported on by the Attorney General as follows:

"U. S. vs. Warner Bros. Pictures (Inc.), Stanley Company of America, and First National Pictures (Inc.), (of Maryland).—Petition filed November 27, 1929, southern district of New York, alleging a violation of section 7 of the Clayton Act in the acquisition by Warner Bros. of stock of First National Picture (of Delaware) and First National Pictures (of Maryland) and praying that Warner Bros. and Stanley Co. be required to divest themselves of all such stock. Preliminary motions disposed of and case is on the calendar for trial.

Other Cases Pending

"U. S. vs. Balaban and Katz Corporation et. al.—Petition filed December 15, 1928, northern district of Illinois, charging a conspiracy to restrain interstate trade and commerce in motion picture films by limiting the exhibition thereof by independent exhibitors through the instrumentality of a clearance agreement and long-term exclusive contracts. Pending on motion by the Government to amend its petition.

"U. S. vs. Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Distributing Corporation et al.—Information filed March 24, 1928, northern district of Illinois, involving an agreement between exchange managers and the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association to refuse to deliver motion picture films during the existence of a labor dispute in August and September, 1927, in Chicago. Pleas of not guilty were entered by defendants, and the case is awaiting further action."

Nothing Definite From Paramount or Warners on Scores

Although admitting that it has obtained no definite commitment from either Warner Bros. or Paramount on the elimination of score charges, the national exhibitors' Continuing Committee chairman, Walter Vincent, has reiterated his statement of last week that the committee believes next year will see the end of the score charge.

Indicating that some distributors may include the score charge, without designating it as such, in a "fair rental sum" rather than as a charge in excess of specified rentals, Vincent said: "Rentals should always be fair for the exhibitor. If a 'fair' rental includes a score charge there should be no objection to it. It is only when a score charge is levied over and above the value of a picture to an exhibitor that the score charge becomes unjust and should be eliminated. The Continuing Committee believes that next year will see the end of such score charge collections."

It is understood that one important distributor would cancel score charges for any circuit which succeeded in obtaining score charge cancellations from any other distributor.

U. S. Expects to Avoid Long Fight Over RCA Patents

Herald Washington Bureau

Hope that lengthy litigation in the anti-trust controversy between the government and the Radio Corporation of America may yet be avoided is voiced by officials of the Department of Justice as a result of recent developments in the negotiations which have been under way for some months in an effort to reach an agreement as to the treatment of patents in the radio industry, one of the major issues of the case.

Included in the patents involved are those covering tubes, among them the types which are used in theatre sound equipment.

Although a few weeks ago it was indicated that the government would be forced to proceed with the suit instituted some months ago, which charges a combination and conspiracy to restrain and monopolize interstate commerce on the part of the Radio Corporation and its affiliated companies, conferences more recently are believed to have virtually brought about an agreement that will simplify whatever court action is finally taken.

The attorney general has received reports that the companies involved in the litigation may agree to the establishment of an open patent pool, similar to that successfully operated by the automobile manufacturers, for the administration of their patent holdings under a trusteeship. If these reports prove well founded the principal point at issue may be disposed of by a consent decree, while other points in the case upon which the government and radio counsel cannot agree will be taken to court for judicial determination.

Meanwhile, whatever the final action by the companies, the Department of Justice is determined that they must desist from practices which the government contends are in violation of the antitrust laws and no compromise will be accepted, it has been emphatically stated by the attorney general.

The suit against the Radio Corporation of America, the General Electric Company, American Telephone and Telegraph Company, the Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Company, General Motors and other corporations was filed in the federal district court in Delaware last May, but action was suspended pending negotiations for the creation of the patent pool. Trade restraint in radio communication and apparatus through contracts and agreements among the defendants to pool and cross license patents was charged by the government.

"I have never felt that the defendants could be pursuaded to agree with the government on all points," Attorney General Mitchell said. "However, it now appears probable that the phases of the case which will be taken to court will be narrowed, greatly simplifying the issues."

Open Western Exchanges

C. C. McDermond and Earl Wardrop have opened exchanges in Denver, Salt Lake City and Butte, Mont., under the name of Certified Productions, Inc. They will handle Big 4, Imperial and Headline product.

MPTOA Requests Managers To Assist in Holiday Mailing

President M. A. Lightman and Secretary M. J. O'Toole of the MPTOA have sent out from national headquarters in New York a special letter to the various theatre owners over the country, asking their cooperation in aiding the Post Office Department in the rapid movement of holiday mail. This is an annual procedure.

The plan, noted in the letter, is for the district manager or exhibitor to work with the local postmaster in arranging a slide or a program note requesting patrons to "Shop and mail early; wrap carefully, address plainly, and put on proper postage."

Roxy Sees $200,000 Weekly Gross in Radio City House

A $200,000 weekly gross was predicted by S. L. (Roxy) Rothafel for the motion picture theatre in Radio City, at a recent AMPA luncheon. Roxy, however, failed to elucidate the manner in which the total would be garnered.

The price sale, Roxy said, "would be a revaluation," with prices dependant upon economic conditions in January 1932, when the house is supposed to open. Radio pictures will predominate, according to the showman.

Columbia and Fox Home Office Staffs Plan Annual Frolics

Harold Rieff, Jean Dressler and Ruth Greenfield, of Columbia's home office staff, head a committee in charge of arrangements for the annual dinner and dance to be staged by the "Columbians" on Saturday, February 13, at the Plaza hotel in New York.

The Fox home office athletic club will hold its annual affair on December 22. Proceeds will go to charity.

Concern Claims Warner Deal

Warners has warned its circuit managers that a concern calling itself 'Theatre Advertising Service, Inc., 4650 Broadway, Chicago" has been claiming a tieup with Warners whereby theatres are to run advertising films for merchants. Warners says it has no deal with such a concern and asks that merchants be notified.

FROM HOLLYWOOD

By LEO MEEHAN

With the conclusion of the executive conferences here this week and the return to New York of Will Hays and most of the New York company heads, production departments proceeded at once to general readjustment. Many studio employees, high and low, were given notices. Contract people were called on the carpet and asked to take substantial cuts. Failing to agree, they were advised that their options would not be taken up.

At Warner-First National there was a momentary threat of strike on the part of union employees in film cutting, sound and laboratory departments. Apparently due to a misunderstanding upon the part of Jack Warner that these men were working under a wage contract agreement, the proposed cuts were temporarily rescinded and the matter now is under negotiation.

At Radio it was announced that Douglas MacLean, associate producer, had decided to withdraw, and Humphrey Pearson, writer, quit when a salary cut was asked.

Rumblings of important changes in the Fox personnel began late in the week when Theodore Butcher, production manager, was let out. Butcher has been with Fox for ten years or more, the past several years in various important executive capacities. Other important changes were being anticipated, including possible cutting down of the directorial and writing staffs.

Frank Capra, the director, leaves for a 10 weeks' European trip next week.

We hear that 19 men have been "locked out" of five Fox Coast theatres. President Canavan of the IATSE has several representatives in town from New York to discuss the situation with West Coast officials. An attempt is being made to avert a strike.

New Radio contracts have been awarded to Bernard Schubert and John Halliday.

There is little action at the other major studios. Pathe is waiting to move to Radio, but definite plans as to who will be absorbed and who let out awaits the all-important stockholders meeting in New York. In fact, much of the entire Radio-Pathe program is much in the air until the big meeting. United Artists is practically closed, and Producer Sam Goldwyn has gone to New York. All pictures on schedule are completed or in the cutting room, and there seems little likelihood of active production work for two months or more. Howard Hughes has completed his program, with the the exception of successfully revising "Scarface." Swanson is on her new honeymoon. Fairbanks is travelling. Pickford is "looking for a suitable story."

Universal is well ahead of schedule, and the number of employees active now is comparatively small. Columbia is working along on a light schedule. Mack Sennett is preparing to start shooting a Moran and Mack feature for Educational, but has not actually begun.

Looks as if Greta Garbo didn't think so well of the "all star" lineup MGM first announced for "Grand Hotel." It is now announced that Garbo will not be in the cast, replaced by Nora Gregor.

Radio is reported still dickering with Wesley Ruggles over his forthcoming option. Ruggles wants the increase it calls for; Radio prefers a cut. The same is true with Edna May Oliver, who was all set to go to New York for a vacation but is remaining for another picture to start immediately.

President E. W. Hammons of Educational left for the East smiling. He says he made no salary cuts, no reductions in personnel. That's sumthin' these days. Well, it is certain not much money is being wasted by the Hammons production executives here. They are not that kind of executives.

Edgar Wallace, English fiction factory, arrived to write for Radio. He dropped and broke his typewriter when he got off the train.

John Stone, former head of Fox's now inoperative foreign production department, has been made a production assistant to Winfield Sheehan.

Paramount has finished "Shanghai Express," the next Marlene Dietrich production by von Sternberg. And the studio is taking plenty of well deserved bows on "Sooky," a sequel to "Skippy" directed by Norman Taurog and featuring Jackie Cooper and Bobbie Coogan. It is a sweetheart!

Taurog celebrated by joining Hollywood's big "appendicitis colony." He lost the little gadget, but is recovering nicely. Everyone is very happy that Tom Mix seems out of danger after a terrifically close call.

As we predicted last week, Harry Arthur shook up the Southern California section of Fox West Coast theatres plenty. Many managers were transferred, some were let out. Arthur is officially designated as assistant to Oscar Oldknow. All house managers are now personally responsible for operation, budgets, advertising, and report direct to Arthur.

Henry Ginsberg has been appointed business manager of Hal Roach studios, succeeding Warren Doane, who remains as a director. Benjamin Shipman, who has been acting as general manager, becomes business manager and legal advisor to Roach.

Hardie Albright, able juvenile, has purchased the balance of his contract from Fox and will return to the New York stage. His work here has been very impressive.

UNITED–MPTO TILT RESTS IN U.S. HANDS

East Pennsylvania Unit Awaits Action of Justice Department On Formal Complaint Made Against Distributing Unit

The protest against alleged unfair and unethical distributing tactics of United Artists, contained in an open letter sent last week to General Sales Manager Al Lichtman by the MPTO of Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey and Delaware, is a closed issue insofar as United is concerned, according to Lichtman. But the opposing exhibitor group thinks differently, having decided this week to continue discussions with the Department of Justice, with which a formal complaint has already been filed.

George Aarons, secretary of the exhibitor unit, which has headquarters at Philadelphia, will again meet Department of Justice agents at Washington next week to present final briefs and complaints, according to Jay Emanuel, leader of the association.

On November 30, the MPTO forwarded to United Artists a generalized summary of complaints against that company's distributing policies. Lichtman answered the charges on the day following, belittling the attack and issuing a blanket denial. This week, the exhibitor association followed up with a second "open letter." Lichtman refused to comment on the newest attack, saying the matter is a closed issue. Text of the second communication to United follows:

Mr. Al Lichtman,
Vice President & Gen. Manager,
United Artists Corporation
New York City.
Dear Sir:

It is not the practice of this organization to engage in verbal tilts in the trade press. Your reply to our open letter of protest against your company's sales policies, however, is so shot through with inaccuracies and mis-statements, probably obtained by you second-hand, that we feel sure that, in the interest of accuracy and truth, you, as an executive of considerable reputation in the trade, will want these corrected.

There were present at the November 27th meeting of the Board of Managers of this organization sixteen of its nineteen members. Among these you will find the names of some of the most representative and most conservative exhibitors in the territory—men whom you know personally to enjoy the highest reputation for honesty and fairness. The vote to issue the protest letter calling upon United Artists Corporation to quit the distribution field was UNANIMOUS—without a single dissenting voice and followed one of the bitterest denunciations of any distributing company ever heard upon the floor of an exhibitor meeting. So much for that.

"Take Bait, Leave Hook"

The frantic attempts of your local representative to "reach" several members of our organization, both prior to and after the meeting, with tempting bait in the form of ridiculous rentals as a price for their silence, we are happy to say proved futile, the fish taking the bait but leaving the hook. One member of our organization received an approved contract for "Palmy Days" for a rental equivalent to approximately one-fourth of the price for which his contract had been previously rejected. If some of these prices are ever revealed, they will make those exhibitors who are paying 40% and 50% for "Palmy Days" anything but happy.

Your statement that United Artists with a dozen pictures to distribute "is operating at a lower percentage cost than any other distributor in the world" proves that the age of miracles is not past. It does not, however, square with the recent attempt of your company to merge its distributing facilities with those of another well-known producer-distributor for reasons of economy. Nor does your statement sound reasonable in the light of the reported heavy losses chalked up by your organization over the past two years.

Again quoting your statement: ". . . we have repeated over and over again that we do business on a 'Look Before You Book' policy." How can the exhibitors "Look Before They Book" when you sell them pictures before the pictures are completed, before they are shown and before they are tested out at public showing to determine their box office value?

Every other film company takes this factor into consideration and when a clear case of overselling is shown, the film company invariably adjusts the one-sided arrangement. Not so United Artists, however, which has consistently pursued a policy of "The Buyer Be Damned."

You will recall, Mr. Lichtman, that two years ago this organization had composed a similar protest to the trade but was prevented from issuing it by your definite assurance at a three-hour conference in Philadelphia that $100,000 had been set aside by your company to adjust the complaints of exhibitors with legitimate grievances.

We regret that you have seen fit in your statement to ignore entirely our complaint charging specific violation of Rule 11 of the Fair Trade Practice Code, which prohibits a film company with an exhibitor's application for contract from negotiating with his competitor before the first contract has been either accepted or rejected. We are willing, however, to rest our case with the Federal Trade Commission.

As for the general contents of your statement—if the United Artists policies are right, then those of every other film company must be wrong. Here again we are willing to rest our case with the thousands of exhibitors throughout the nation whose dealings with United Artists over the past ten years have left them disillusioned, embittered and hopeful that your methods and policies will be brought to an early termination. We would welcome an investigation of our charges by Mr. Howard Hughes and the other producing members of your company in whose fairness we have implicit faith.

Yours truly,

Allied Districts Discuss Problems Before Iowa Meet

Music tax, admission tax, insurance, Allied newsreel, posters, difficulties with RKO franchise, disc equipment, holiday trailers are all subjects of discussion at district meetings of the Allied Theatre Owners of Iowa, preliminary to the state convention in Des Moines, January 12, 13.

Leaders of the organization have expressed themselves as anticipating an admission tax as a result of action of Congress.

High Pressure!

Coincident with the awarding by the Metropolitan Square Corporation of the steam furnishing contract for the Radio City project to the New York Steam Corporation, comes a flock of figures, indicating by various comparisons the huge amount of steam necessary to heat the center. For example: 20,000 radiators, 500 carloads of coal and enough water to float five ocean liners the size of the Leviathan required annually to produce 360,000,000 pounds of steam, 2,000,000 pounds per day in the winter. That is enough, we must believe, according to demon statisticians, to drive the Twentieth Century Limited over 2,200 miles; while the annual poundage would pull that same train more than 400,000 miles. If it means anything that is better than 16 times the circumference of the earth, and at the equator, mind you. The answer is, of course, what of it?

"Canned" Sermons Bring Churchmen To Sales Session

Various church dignitaries and ecclesiastical authorities this week witnessed the first showing of a "canned" church service at the home office of RCA Photophone in New York. The "services" were followed by a sales talk on behalf of sound equipment, RCA executives pointing out to the clergy that the sound recorded services would work wonders to increase church attendance, and in the next breath informing the churchmen that RCA portable machines at $500 may be purchased after January 15, price f.o.b. New York.

And so, with the presentation of the first of this series of "sermons," the electric got under way another propaganda campaign with which it is intended to further break down the evidently strong sales barrier to be hurdled before sound reproducers gain a foothold in non-theatrical markets.

Erpi and Photophone have for quite some time been actively engaged in promoting the class room as a buyer of sound machines, but without much success due, principally to the lack of product available. This week, RCA tackled the church field.

Homer Rodeheaver, music director, is in charge of RCA's campaign for church installations, which did meet a slight setback at this week's initial screening, when protests were voiced by various churchmen against the omission of actual prayer in the "canned" sermons, and the inclusion of too much lipstick on the lips of certain pretty choir singers. Incidentally, one clergyman attending the screening "stumped" an RCA executive when he asked why it is necessary to devote so much footage in the sermons to closeups of the better looking choristers.

PASSING IN REVIEW

The department endeavors to set forth two lines of material of service to the exhibitor—first a showman's evaluations of the oustanding pictures—second, reviews of information

"FRANKENSTEIN" is going to be a box office gold mine for both the big cities and the small towns. Being such radically different entertainment, with the "monster" business portrayed by a character horrifying enough to give you the heebie-jeebies, it will romp home for you with sweet profits on the engagement.

The title is magnetic in itself. Even without the help of the book it sort of gets them interested; add to that title the catch line of "The Man Who Made a Monster," and you've got a powerful team to cash in on in every way. The selling of this one should be the crowning achievement of your showmanship career because here is a picture which gives you everything you ever asked for in the way of a picture or slants to work up a knock-out campaign. This title is "box office" in every way.

The "audience" strength is unquestioned, and although the picture can be sold as a "thing of horror," why hurt its chances when you have sufficient better slants to work on? Its interesting and absorbing entertainment which will hold the toughest customer's attention from the start to the finish.

Names? That's the only hitch of the whole thing. You've got few and weak names to play with, but fortunately you won't need them. The patrons will be quite content when they see how well the cast handles this story. So here is one time you can push the picture's title through 'way above anything else, especially star names, and know that it will help sell itself. Just dig up some choice morsels of "creepy, leery, eerie" catch lines and then feed them out in generous portions to an amusement hungry community where they will appreciate and flock to see one swell picture.

You know your clientele better than I do, so spot it where it will get you the most dough. Kids will eat it up even if they won't understand half of what it's all about, and the grown-ups? They ought to be coming back for second portions. Believe me, boys, here's a picture packed with plenty of dough for your bank account.

"ARROWSMITH." Backed up by a cast of marvelous ability, Ronald Colman comes through with a grand performance in a picturization of Sinclair Lewis' well-known story. By every right this should be one of the money-making pictures of the present season. It is sincere, absorbing entertainment in every sense of the word, and while the ending is rather depressing, it should meet with popular approval in all sections and types of communities. Helen Hayes again gives a personal performance that is equal in every respect to that of Colman and deserves top billing along with him. Even if she had not already made an impression in "The Sin of Madelon Claudet," she would still win her audience both on Times Square or Main Street. Others who help carry the story along so sincerely are Richard Bennett, A. E. Anson, Myrna Loy, and practically every one in the cast.

The "box office" value of the title should be big because of the author's name and Nobel prize winning. The book, too, was widely read all over the country and is equally as strong as Lewis' name. So with those two slants as a start no showman ought to find it difficult to create money-getting interest. Selling it strongly along those two angles and working in the slant of the country doctor who accomplished so much for science, plus the heart-throb of a loyal wife, you ought to make them mighty anxious to get in line for a ticket.

As for "audience" pull, this picture has all of that you could ask for. They'll walk out with a tear or two, perhaps, but happy in the thought that they have seen a fine show.

Of no use for the kids, but O K in every other way. So if you've bought this one, get your dates set as soon as you can and with a little smart showmanship you ought to turn in a handsome profit.

United Artists can well be proud of this offering and Sam Goldwyn deserves a vote of thanks for getting it onto the screen as such fine entertainment. We enjoyed every moment of it. So should you and your patrons.

"THE CUBAN LOVE SONG" is far from a "wow" picture, as "wow" pictures are judged in these rather trying times, but it is the type of entertainment which ought to get by nicely even though it doesn't break any house records, especially outside the big cities.

As a Marine, Lawrence Tibbett is the funniest looking soldier we've seen in a long time, but since his chief mission in this picture is to warble in his best form, he gets by, just so-so. Jimmy "Schnozzola" Durante again clicks with the sort of comedy that will make Squeedunk as well as New York giggle and laugh. Lupe Velez, too, carries her part of the show in grand shape, despite its shortcomings. Ernest Torrence seems a bit miscast, but, like the scenery, he'll be acceptable. The remainder of the cast function as good as most supporting casts.

The title can be made "box office" by only the showman selling it, but refrain from overselling or your cash customers may expect more than the picture really has to offer. Build the title up around Tibbett and his fine voice, together with the title song which is used at several points in the picture. Then throw in a large dose of "Schnozzola" Durante and Lupe Velez and you ought to have enough ammunition to get them in to see a fair show.

"Audience" value is not too strong, but then again it's not too weak, so if you surround it with some real entertaining shorts your patrons can't kick at all.

As usual, the Marine slant offers the old recruiting tieup angle, but whether you think it worth while is up to you and the kind of a house you're runnning. Peanuts, the same. (Lupe sells peanuts and they must use the "Peanut Vendor" number quite often in the picture.)

All in all there is no reason why you can't keep up your average business with "The Cuban Love Song" and possibly build up enough interest to just push it over for a wee bit better than average. If you do, you deserve a "pat-on-the-back."

Better lay off it for the kids. While the Marine slant is good for them, the illegitimate child angle is N. G. Maybe good for mid-week booking.

"HIS WOMAN" brings together Gary Cooper as a sea captain of a tramp freighter and Claudette Colbert as the woman of loose morals. But it also brings to the screen the cutest and cleverest (accidental or otherwise) baby that we've looked at for many a screening. He's Richard Spiro and he's but nine months old. Wait 'til your audience spots that kid. They'll go for him in a big way. He deserves a "star" spot in your advertising and other selling slants.

The title is rather weak for the box office, but can be built up through selecting the outstanding slants and playing them up. The stars will be as strong as their individual pulling-power in your community. If they go strong for Colbert and Cooper, then you will find the sailing smooth to the box office. If they are weak then it's up to you to push this one with plenty of selling.

Once you get them into your theatre the "audience" value of the picture should keep them satisfied.

Handling of Miss Colbert's characterization should be tactful in those communities where straight-laced persons have a habit of sticking their noses into your picture-fare. Play up her good qualities in this role rather than the fact that she's been identified with notorious resorts all over the globe.

Thumbs down on the kids and for Sundays in small cities. But the adults will enjoy it, so keep it spotted where they generally come out. Middle of the week, or second change, sounds reasonable.—CHARLES E. LEWIS.

Delicious

(Fox)

Comedy-Drama

Tunefully decorated with catchy George Gershwin music, the latest Gaynor-Farrell picture from Fox is appropriately labeled "Delicious."

It is a departure and much more important than just another Gaynor-Farrell production, in view of the musical components and their application.

It is the sort of Cinderella-gets-the-rich-boy which the public has indicated it wants from Charlie and Janet, and it has sufficient novelty of plot and treatment to keep it thoroughly entertaining. Besides, it is a clean, wholesome "family picture" for all the folks, old and young.

Gershwin's "New York Rhapsody," which is presented against a striking background of New York life, is an outstanding feature of the production and probably constitutes one of the finest, if not the finest, musical composition originally conceived for motion pictures.

Other of the distinctly tuneful musical compositions have the ring of great popularity about them.

The whole production has been most adroitly assembled. Its elements of distinct box office appeal are numerous. There are many reasons for believing that as a holiday attraction for the theatres it will do a lot toward making the Christmas time merry for exhibitors.

This time Miss Gaynor does a Scotch immigrant girl, who has a lot of trouble getting into this free country because she's broke. How Charlie Farrell finally rescues her, and weds her, is the story. Fox has mounted the picture most attractively, and the stars are surrounded with a clever cast. El Brendel carries the comedy as Farrell's valet, and Brendel should feel much better, because his opportunities for laughs are much better than for some time.

The story was written by Guy Bolton, with the adaptation by Bolton and Sonya Levien. Ira Gershwin wrote the lyrics for George's tuneful numbers. David Butler comes in with another excellent directoral job, which is fast becoming a habit with him. Some of Ernest Palmer's photographic effects are very good.

A troop of Russian entertainers, who appear as immigrants on the liner and later in New York, do some splendid work. Not only are they fine actors, but they also add attractiveness to the production in the role of cabaret performers. Raul Roulien is especially effective as a Russian boy who falls in love with Janet, only to lose her to Charlie Farrell. Others contributing to the "deliciousness" of the picture include Lawrence O'Sullivan, Manya Roberti, Olive Tell, Virginia Cherrill and Mischa Auer.

Produced and distributed by Fox. Directed by David Butler from the story by Guy Bolton. Adaptation by the author and Sonya Levien. Music by George Gershwin, lyrics by Ira Gershwin. Photography, Ernest Palmer. Sound, Joseph E. Aiken. Art direction, Joseph Wright. Costumes, Guy Duty. Film editor, Irene Morra. Release date, December 27, 1931.

Stepping Sisters

(Fox)

Comedy

"Stepping Sisters" gave plenty of big laughs to a Santa Ana audience at its preview. Story concerns three ex-burlesque girls who meet after many years when one of them (Louise Dresser) is a social climber, another (Jobyna Howland) is a Shakespearean reader, and the third (Minna Gombell) who has stayed in the merry-merry, is a sort of husband-player-around-with.

Louise Dresser is staging an allegory written by the town's social leader, and Howland and Gombell ruin it by appearing in tights and going through their old burlesque routine. They do this to help out Dresser's husband (William Collier), who is fed up with his wife's social antics and hopes to get his household back on a corned-beef and cabbage basis.

The show, topped by the appearance of Howland and Gombell in tights, is the high spot of the picture, and includes the presentation of a clever dance number, received with applause by the preview audience.

Honors for the cast go to the three women, with Howland getting the big laughs. Beautiful Barbara Weeks was thought to have handled her brief scenes with much ability. A hokum tag finish sends the crowd away laughing.

Sooky

(Paramount)

Juvenile

(Seen in Hollywood)

Jackie Cooper comes again to the screen with another splendidly received performance in "Sooky," and Robert Coogan offers support commented upon as "remarkable." This sequel to "Skippy" has tender appreciation of the psychology of boyhood. The story is of the heart, not the head, but remains logical and quite possible of happening in any American town. Those who have boys of the age of these will be astonished to hear from the screen almost exact quotations from their own youngsters, so definitely do lines and plot follow every-day family life.

Norman Taurog, in his direction, was thought very definitely to have repeated the high success of "Skippy." The preview audience—even those who came from the studio and were thoroughly familiar with every detail—giggled and laughed and cried straight through, with happy forgetfulness of everything except what was happening on a square of white cloth out in front.

The principals of "Sooky" are all the same as those of "Skippy," but they cannot be just the same again should other pictures be made of these happy playmates. Sooky's mama dies in this picture and Sooky goes to live with Skippy.

All these capable persons—Jackie Searl, Willard Robertson, Enid Bennett, Helen Jerome Eddy—support the child stars with sympathy and understanding. Harry Beresford, as an aged indigent who is carried away to the country farm despite Skippy's pleading, contributes an episode considered generally of remarkable power and pathos.

Produced and distributed by Paramount. From story by Percy Crosby. Screen play by Sam Mintz, Joe Mankiewicz, Norman McLeod. Director, Norman Taurog. Assistant director, Art Jacobson. Cameraman, Arthur Todd. Sound, Eugene Merritt. Release date, December 26, 1931.

The Big Shot

(RKO Pathe)

Comedy

(Seen in Hollywood)

A deserted auto camp in the desert provides the major scene for RKO Pathe's latest Eddie Quillan comedy, "The Big Shot," and the place isn't so funny for the hero when he buys it with money borrowed from his prospective mother-in-law and finds he has been framed by the villain, who covets the heart and hand of the heroine. That's enough of the story, a clever tale written by George Dromgold and Hal Conklin, with screen play and lines by Joseph Fields and Earl Baldwin.

The thing is packed with audience laughs, which go not only to Eddie, but to Rosco Ates, who plays a stuttering barber; to Otis Harlan, whose characterization of a village doctor was termed a fine piece of work; and to Arthur Stone, who was considered to have almost purloined the picture with his impersonation of the Old Timer, a desert rat who inhabits the auto camp and whose specialty is the frozen truth.

Other bits which roused the audience are contributed by Belle Bennett and Mary Nolan—beautiful as ever—and Maureen O'Sullivan is entirely satisfactory as the lovely young mainspring of the plot.

Incidentally, the picture has one intensely tragic episode, one that made the preview audience gasp and clutch the seats, when the heroine's car hurtles into quicksand and begins slowly to sink, with the girl, injured at the wheel, powerless to move.

Produced and distributed by RKO Pathe. Directed by Ralph Murphy. Original story by George Dromgold, Hal Conklin. Screen play and dialogue by Joseph Fields, Earl Baldwin. Editor, Charles Craft. Photography by Arthur Miller. Release date, December 18, 1931.

X Marks the Spot

Melodrama

A new newspaper melodrama, and again having concern with the ways and wiles of a tabloid, comes to the screen at Moss's Broadway in New York this week. Herein, however, is portrayed a character familiar to New York's tabloid readers, Walter Winchell, and as it happens, Wallace Ford, who plays that role, comes fairly close to resembling Winchell himself.

Broadway's columnist, it is melodramatically revealed, becomes involved as a suspect in the murder of Mary Nolan, the showgirl who is about to sue the "Gazette" for libel as a result of a specimen of Ford's journalism. On the trail himself, he finally discovers the murderer, then shields him as the result of a past obligation, and finally shoots it out with the murderer, successfully, of course.

Lew Cody plays the hard-boiled editor, who gets his chance in the big town and calls for his star reporter on the small town sheet. In the small town, when Ford's sister is crippled, Riggs, gangster played by Fred Kohler, lends him the money for the necessary operation. Eight years later, in the big city, Ford attempts to repay the debt when he tracks down Kohler, but circumstances outside his control make it all come out perfectly in the interest of good melodrama.

Sally Blane, as Cody's secretary, supplies the romantic interest with Ford, while Joyce Coad assists with the brother and little sister angle.

The Broadway audience appeared to extract a satisfactory amount of entertainment from the effort, seeming to appreciate the light and carefree buoyancy of Ford, the energy of Cody and the attractiveness of Miss Elane.

Ben-Hur

(MGM)

A Chapter Reopened

Ben-Hur, significant of a chapter in the volume of motion picture history, and one of the greatest box office selling films ever turned out of a production center, returns to the screen under the sponsorship of MGM, aided and abetted by the addition of appropriate sound effects, but still retaining nearly all, if not all, of its original subtitles.

A New York audience at the Rialto, almost, it may be recorded, fascinated, sat without a murmur of restlessness through the tremendous length of the film, which runs a full two hours and eight minutes. Be it further reported that the same audience gripped the sides of the seats when the stupendous chariot race, strengthened by the sound, was run in its smashing triumph for the hero, Ramon Novarro, on the screen in the huge Roman circus setting.

It would seem there is little necessity of recounting the story, beyond recalling that it has for theme the tyranny that symbolized conquering Rome in its dealings with subjected peoples, in this case the Jews. The greater part of the film is set in Jerusalem, with the chariot race meant to be in that great ancient center, Antioch.

Within that wider scope is the more concentrated narrative of the wealthy Jewish family of Hur, of which Ben-Hur is the surviving male, living with his mother and sister. Claire McDowell and Kathleen Key portray respectively the roles of mother and sister. Francis X. Bushman gives us again his famous role of Messala, former friend of the Hurs, who has

A HOT TIP!

READ THIS EDITORIAL BY ALICOATE IN FILM DAILY:

"Ben Hur" and "The Big Parade"

The experiment of M-G-M in returning "Ben Hur" and "The Big Parade" to the screen, accompanied with and synchronized to the strains of befitting music, will be watched with interest on all sides. Preliminary reports, from a few scattered outside districts, give a smashing majority in favor of the renaissance. And why not? Here are two of the greatest pictures ever made. Both are naturals in lending themselves to inspiring musical scores. Another good deed in the daily doings of Leo-the-Lion.

turned Roman, with all the cruelties and arrogance attendant upon that change of patriation.

Nigel de Brulier plays Simonides, servant of the Hurs, who becomes a wealthy merchant following the temporary disorganization of the Hur family, while May McAvoy is, of course, still Esther, the beautiful daughter of Simonides, with whom Novarro falls in love and marries after the rescue of the mother and sister from a dungeon, the miraculous cure which restores them to life from the living death of leprosy, and the reconciliation of a torn and broken family of power.

When Novarro labors in the galley ship as a slave chained to his fellows, and when the pirate ships attack the Roman vessels, the sound contributes its best assistance. The lash of the whip is felt in the audience, the cries and screams attendant upon the battle at sea make the scene realistic and intense.

Altogether, Ben-Hur in sound is the return of an epic in the production of motion pictures, strengthened, it may be readily gathered from audience reaction, by the judicious application of that sound, a modern technique.

The Battle of Gallipoli

(Wardour Films)

War Drama

The ill-fated Gallipoli campaign of the British forces in the World War has been one of the most widely discussed subjects of that four-year struggle, but the element of controversy is omitted, in favor of a depiction of the stark realism of the tragedy of war. There is indirect reference in the impassioned outburst of one of the youths when under the stress of incessant shelling he draws a word-picture of what he would like to "tell England," but the scenes then flashed were typical of combat on any of the major fronts. (The picture is from Ernest Raymond's novel, "Tell England.")

The British Admiralty cooperated with the producers, as did Sir Ian Hamilton, who had command in the Gallipoli fighting. The result of that cooperation and the treatment in production is a portrayal of the horror and futility of the campaign, rather than any criticism of military policy or absolving of the war staff and it is primarily a story of individual and personal courage.

The romantic element, woven into many American-made picturings of the war, is waived in the Wardour production. There is the love of mother, but that is all.

Contrast, leading up to the grim scenes of battle, is presented by the opening peaceful romping on the estate of the mother of one of the boys. (Fay Compton has the role of Mrs. Doe.) There is the swimming meet of the schoolboys. Then War.

From the standpoint of spectacle two scenes have most play. One is the landing of the troops; the other is the bombardment of the Turkish positions from the battleships. Then there is the hand-to-hand fighting, and the storming of "Clara," the name given by the men in the trenches to the gun that is strafing them for months.

Carl Harbord and Tony Bruce are the two youths jerked from canoe to trench by enlistment. Harbord plays the role of the lad whose courage falters for a bit but returns to carry him up the heights to silence the enemy gun singlehandedly. In both, youthfulness is pronounced, accenting the theme of the pitiless cruelty of armed conflict.

Presented by Wardour Films, Ltd., from the novel "Tell England," by Ernest Raymond. Directed by Anthony Asquith and Geoffrey Barke. Photographed by Jack Parker, Stanley Rodwell and James Rogers. Art direction by Arthur B. Woods. Edited by Mary Field. Sound direction by Victor A. Peers. Release date, December 4. Running time, 76 minutes.

His Woman

(Paramount)

Drama

A wholly lovable infant, Richard Spiro by name, serves in this first Gary Cooper-Claudette Colbert co-starring vehicle to bring a rough freighter captain and a girl with something of a past together after a more or less damaged romance.

That the child is entirely capable of working itself most completely into the hearts of any audience anywhere was very clearly indicated at the New York Paramount this week, when sighs and murmurs from the women and indulgent noises from men greeted every appearance, and they are numerous, of the baby on the screen.

Favorable comment of the entertainment inherent in the film story and the work of the two principals as well as that of the supporting group of players, was noticeable. A questionable seaport somewhere in the Carribean, on board the freighter and in New York are the three spots in which the story pursues its logical course.

Cooper discovers an abandoned baby when about to leave the southern port for New York, and by reason of the infant's lovableness, takes it with him. Seeking a woman to take care of it, he at last finds Miss Colbert, who has a great desire to return to New York, but absolutely no money. A fabrication concerning her appearance in the place satisfies Cooper and he ships the girl as nurse. The mate, however, had met her in some dive and recognizes her. Forcing his attentions upon her, he is interrupted by Cooper who accidentally knocks him into the sea. At New York, Cooper and the girl, about to be married, are met by government inspectors. The mate had been picked up by a passing liner and preferred charges against the captain. To save him, Claudette admits her past, and he breaks with her. Neglect of the child, subsequent illness and the return of the girl to nurse it, leads to a reconciliation between the two after a stormy scene or two.

Two negroes, Hamtree Harrington and Sidney Easton, stewards to Cooper and willing but clumsy nurses to the baby, provide more than a bit of amusement, which seemed thoroughly enjoyed by the Paramount patrons. One bit of photography pronounced excellent pictured a huge liner passing the freighter at night in a heavy fog.

Produced and distributed by Paramount. Directed by Edward Sloman. Based on novel, "The Sentimentalist," by Dale Collins. Screen play by Adelaide Heilbron, Melville Baker. Photographed by William Steiner. Release date, November 21, 1931. Running time, 75 minutes.

Automobiles and more automobiles! Automobiles racing, skidding, crashing, going over cliffs—this happens only once, and that's enough—automobiles as the swift symbol of modern youth's daring and recklessness. That's the way "Racing Youth" registers with a reviewer who observes all traffic signals, gets no parking tickets and tries to keep his fenders uncrumpled. The over-the-cliff episode is sufficiently realistic to have evoked a flurry of gasps from a Coast audience.

Louise Fazenda brings her usual happy comedy into action as secretary to the heroine, played by June Clyde, an heiress who inherits an automobile factory that has suffered almost to the last sparkplug from the economic depression.

There is a satisfactory villain, played by Forrest Stanley, whose schemes are wrecked at the last moment by the hero, a young mechanical engineer who happens in this instance to be Frank Albertson.

Slim Summerville, as a stuttering mechanic, and Otis Harlan, as the factory bookkeeper who knows the worst, supply their full share of the fun which bubbles and sparkles through the picture.

Dialogue, direction and photography were thought to have been capably handled.

Produced and distributed by Universal. Screen play by Earl Snell. Supervised by Henry Henigson. Directed by Vin Moore. Photography by George Robinson. Edited by Harry Lieb. Sound, C. Roy Hunter.

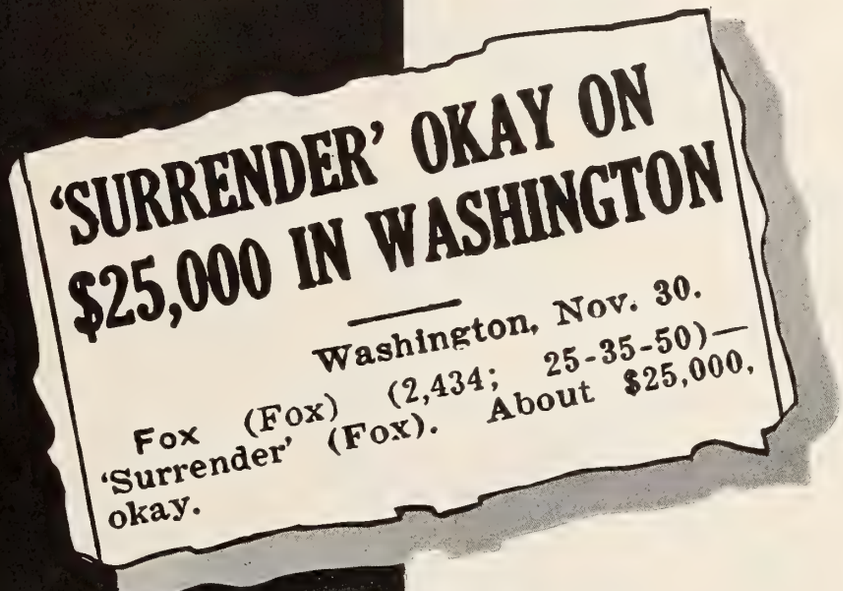
The Nevada Buckaroo

(Tiffany)

Western



Bob Steele plays the lead in this number of the Tiffany series of westerns. Dorothy Dix, opposite, completing the romantic interest, and the supporting players were thought to have given satisfactory performances.

Steele, leading a group of bandits, is caught in a stage hold-up when he attempts to steal a kiss from one of the passengers, Miss Dix. By a ruse, Steele's pals frame a pardon, take it to the governor and obtain Steele's pardon and release. The bandits steal a petition from the mayor to make the town the county seat, and switch its text to read like a petition for pardon.

He returns to town to thank the people, believing the petition real. The folks run him out. He returns to thank his bandit friends for executing his release, but tells them he is going straight. They run him out, as well. Finally he manages to get a job as stage coach guard, but when another hold-up is staged by his former partners on the coach he is guarding he is suspected of being implicated.

To vindicate himself, Steele goes out after both the stolen money and the bandits. After a few fights and the shooting and hard riding

Forgotten Women

(Monogram)

(Seen in Hollywood)

Beryl Mercer, veteran character woman, drew considerable applause in "Forgotten Women," new Monogram picture produced under supervision of Trem Carr. So well, in the opinion of many present, does Miss Mercer realize her role of the amiable busybody who keeps two young lovers from wrecking their romance that the preview audience followed her through every scene with sympathy and chuckles, and sometimes with bursts of mirth.

The story gives Rex Bell a chance as leading man in the part of a swaggering young reporter who becomes a city editor. Beguiled by success, our hero forgets his sweetheart, played, it was thought, with genuine charm by Marion Schilling. Rex makes good in the part, and, after many wobblings between right and wrong, as a lover.

Hollywood is the story scene, and Edward Kane plays a motion picture producer of the baser sort. Edward Earle, remembered as a star at Universal, handles the role of a gang leader from Chicago who is seeking a foothold in filmland.

Produced and distributed by Monogram Pictures. Supervised by Trem Carr. Story by Wellyn Totman. Adapted by Adele Buffington. Directed by Dick Thorpe. Assisted by Paul Malvern. Photography by Archie Stout. Sound, Balsley and Phillips. Release date, December 1, 1931. Running time, 67 minutes.

Helpmates

Real Laughs

Laurel and Hardy make the most, as usual, of the opportunities here presented for extracting real laughs from situations, however replete with slapstick they may be. Hardy's wife is away and he throws a big party which grows sufficiently wild to nearly wreck the house. His wife wires she will return shortly and Oliver shakes himself out of a hangover and gets busy. Stan Laurel comes to help, and the result will make anybody laugh as they seldom do.—Running time, 20 minutes.

Screen Snapshots

(Columbia)

Fan Interest

Numerous Hollywood celebrities have their momentary inning in this number of the series, which, like the others, is redolent with fan interest. Wampas winners of 1931, Lew Ayres practicing football for "Spirit of Notre Dame," Post and Gatty, Clifton Webb, Gloria Swanson, all appear. Ben Lyon is seen winning the tennis championship of Malibu Beach and a Hollywood premier flashes before the camera.—Running time, 9 minutes.

The Lorelei

Fair Cartoon

A fairly satisfactory cartoon, one of the Paul Terry Toon numbers, wherein the siren-heroine is out to get her man, a sailor who ignores her. From the sea they go to a beer garden where she is successful and everybody has a fine time. Recording is good.—Running time, 6 minutes.

The Hasty Marriage

(MGM)

Weak

Charley Chase falls rather below his usual standard of comedy, since this one, slapstick to a great extent, fails to show the earmarks of really amusing and clever comedy. Chase actually indulges in pie-throwing, which is a severe indictment in itself. But perhaps the indictment might better be set against the author of the scenario.—Running time, 21 minutes.

Guests Wanted

(RKO Pathe)

Amusing

When Benny Rubin inherits a hotel named the Hesperus, he advertises that there is buried treasure somewhere on the premises. The guests arrive in force, and begin to take the hotel apart with vim and vigor. When they are finished with the place, unsuccessfully, an explosion drops the hidden treasure into Bennie's willing lap. The idea is amusing and the result is equally so.—Running time, 18 minutes.

Tropical Ceylon

(MGM)

Satisfactory

One of the numbers which FitzPatrick is making for M-G-M release, and one which, though of usual travelogue interest, carries no particular portion of the sparkle that can make these shorts different and especially interesting. —Running time, 10 minutes.

Curiosities

(Columbia)

Oddly Interesting

Interesting in their oddity are these scenes in one of Walter Futter's series. John P. Medbury, who supplies the accompanying dialogue, steers away from his usual attempts at humor, and tells a straight story. Zombies, a junk dealer who collects airplane parts, the richest and poorest church in the world at Columbia, Wash., and the peculiar habits of certain fish come in for their share of attention.—Running time, 8 minutes.

The Village Specialist

(M-G-M)

Clever

Clever in the animated cartoon style is this Flip the Frog number, in which Flip, specialist extraordinary of the village, does his best to mend a broken water pipe. He is successful, however, only in flooding the place. Not over many laughs, but cleverly done, which counts for much in the animated line.—Running time, 8 minutes.

Peasant's Paradise

Interesting

Interesting is this camera record of life in Southern Germany, one of the Romantic Journeys numbers produced by Claude Flemming. Beautiful scenery and the ways of the peasant contribute vastly to the success of the short subject. Multicolor photography makes the film doubly attractive.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Nomadie

(J. D. Williams)

Interesting

More or less general interest from the travelogue standpoint attached to this, the pictorial record of a trip through Germany. Much of the footage is devoted to scenes attendant upon the evaculation of the Rhineland by the French troops. Other homely scenes, of German peasant life, have an attraction.—Running time, 17 minutes.

The Voice of Hollywood

Fair

Despite the fact that laugh-provoking Andy Clyde acts as guest announcer for Station S-T-A-R in this number of the series, the piece falls short of cleverness because of the weak continuity with which he has to work. He succeeds in extracting a few laughs from the lines however.—Running time, 11 minutes.

Canine Champions

(RKO Pathe)

Good

Sport lovers, particularly in the field of hunting, should enjoy this Grantland Rice Sportlight which in its appeal is limited to that type of patron. After a rather long showing and description of champion setters, the picture goes into pheasant hunting, which provides the action. Running time, 10 minutes.

The Eyes Have It

(Vitaphone)

Funny

An enjoyable bit of comedy with Edgar Bergen, the ventriloquist, and his dummy featured. Scene is in an optician's office, and the cross dialogue makes for more than a few laughs. A girl as assistant does her share in getting the goods across.—Running time, 10 minutes.

All-American Kickback

Funny

A high standard of amusement carries all the way through this comedy of football, with Harry Gribbon in the lead as the collegian who wins the game in the last fraction of nothing to play. A little more attention to detail in the short might have helped a bit in the ultimate result. Geneva Mitchell, Vernon Dent, Lincoln Stedman, Dorothy Granger lend their support to comedian Gribbon. Del Lord directed. Running time, 20 minutes.

Relativity and Relatives

(Vitaphone)

Good

Dr. Rockwell, supposedly escaped from an insane asylum, lands in a college where the learned Professor Sweinstein is awaited to propound his theory of space. Mistaken for the professor Rockwell takes the opportunity to expound his own theories about everything in general and nothing in particular.—Running time, 18 minutes.

Aladdin's Lamp

Good

New and different lines serve to make this Terry-Toon cartoon clever and amusing beyond the usual standard. Any audience anywhere should laugh at this number as though they really meant it.—Running time, 6 minutes.

THEATRE RECEIPTS

A marked improvement in theatre receipts is recorded this week in the compilation of grosses, as 186 theatres in 30 cities amassed a total gross of $2,550,524, a gain of $165,981 over the previous calendar week, ended November 28, when the record showed a total of $2,384,543 from 190 theatres in 30 cities. Still further evidence of the unusual gain is indicated by the fact that five new high individual house figures and only three new lows were noted, as compared to eight new lows and only one new high for the previous week. Two of the five highs this week were obtained with "Frankenstein," two with "Possessed" and one with "The Phantom of Paris."

WHEN THE SCREEN TEACHES

by RITA C. McGOLDRICK

WITH the approach of the Christmas holidays every theatre manager is considering the type of program that he will offer to win the attention of the school children and the young people home from college who will pour into his theatre during their free days. In hundreds of communities, club women and thoughtful Parent-Teacher groups, cooperating helpfully with their local theatre managers, have arranged for family audience pictures for the weekends of this month, which will offer clean and high grade entertainment for juveniles. Many of these groups, using "School and Screen" service, and its accompanying questionnaires, will fill their theatres with new audiences. The theatre manager, as a result, reaps the goodwill of many intelligent patrons as well as a big box office return; the community is benefited by the best entertainment which the screen offers.

"School and Screen" has selected for the month of December four noteworthy productions with unusual educational background. Literature and the classics, the World war and the Civil war, exploration, adventure, travel, geography, geology, and natural history, are all presented in authentic story form in the pictures listed in this pamphlet.

A department that has for its definite aims:

1. To encourage children to see the best things of the screen, thereby leaving them less time and money for the poorer kind.
2. To have the entertainment screen contribute directly and constructively to their education.
3. By winning support for high type pictures to offer an incentive to producers to make more of the same kind.

"Explorers of the World"

Within the past several years great expeditions have gone to strange and far places, some sent on their scientific mission by governments, some by the Museum of Natural History in quest of new data and rare specimens, some for the sake of adventure itself, and some with patriotic zeal to find uncharted lands and honors for their country.

A newly organized motion picture company, Raspin Productions, Inc., offers an extraordinarily interesting picture titled "Explorers of the World," which is of particular value to "School and Screen." The picture opens at a banquet with six great explorers as guests of honor. Harold Noice, as toastmaster, presents in their turn Gene Lamb, Laurence M. Gould, Harold McCracken, and Lt. Com. J. R. Stenhouse. Each guest, responding, tells the story of the highlights of his greatest adventure.

The curtains behind the speaker's table roll back and the screen becomes alive with the most amazing and exciting kind of visual story.

This picture has everything—magnificent photography, weird festivals and strange customs, elephants in a death conflict, hundreds of strange animals, whales and walrus, unknown birds, and the beauty of the jungle, as well as the glamour of the frozen North. Every school child should be encouraged to see this picture, and every parent and educator will find their background enriched by this film experience.

Classical "Ben-Hur"

"Ben-Hur," the great novel of General Lew Wallace, which, it is claimed, has had a circulation through the years as large as that of the Bible, and which as a play ran for 22 seasons, has returned to the screen in a synchronized edition. The producers have not attempted to add speech to the film, which undoubtedly would detract from the power of the drama which moves with so much majesty that dialogue is not necessary. But sound effects have been added with excellent results.

One hears the murmur of crowds, the swish of water, martial music, the thunder of horses hoofs and the grinding of wheels in the chariot race, the crashing of chariots and the cries from the onlookers in the great amphitheatre.

"Ben-Hur," made in a day when motion pictures were groping to find fuller expression, stands out as one of the first great achievements of the screen. With a cast which included more than 150,000 persons, it is a spectacle well worthy of a revival.

Two War Pictures

We have selected "Surrender," which tells the story of the German viewpoint of the World war, because we believe it is important for young people to know something of the patriotism, the loyalty, and the suffering of the Germans during that conflict. Pictures of this type are an influence toward international amity.

This feature tells the story of a German prison camp, and of a family of German aristocrats in their feudal castle, who have had to learn the bitterness of sacrificing three sons to the war. This is not a great picture but it is an appealing one and is worthwhile entertainment for older boys and girls.

Richard Dix, in the melodramatic and delightful "Secret Service," brings the glamour of young romance, heroism and patriotism, to a fast moving story of intrigue and the dangers of the spying system during the Civil War. This is an exceptional family audience picture which can be endorsed for the younger as well as the older members of the family group.

Fast upon the heels of these, Paramount will release "Sooky" which, like the inimitable "Skippy," will have appeal for everyone. "Sooky" probably will appear at the theatres through the Christmas holidays. It will be previewed in the studio next week, and carried in January's "School and Screen" service. In the meanwhile, it is a good name to write down on your list of pictures which the young people under your charge should be encouraged to see during their Christmas vacation.

Ben—Hur

MGM

Stars: Ramon Navarro, Francis X. Bushman, and May McAvoy.

"Ben-Hur" is one of the classics of the screen. Although it was among the first of the spectacle pictures, with 150,000 people in its cast, it will never grow old, for it has so much of actual beauty as well as massiveness. The recent perfection in color processes have made no improvement on the beautiful color sequences in the original picture, but the coming of sound gave the producers an opportunity to add a synchronized score, with fine orchestration and sound effects which have given new life and animation to this revised edition. "Ben-Hur" is important for children of all ages, and is particularly appropriate at this Christmas season because of its religious pageantry and historical recording of the coming of Christ.

Secret Service

RKO Radio

Stars: Richard Dix, Shirley Grey.

This is a love story of the Civil war, a strong drama with fast action, and a plot having to do with the intrigue of the spying system. Richard Dix is the older of two brothers who have enlisted with the Secret Service of the Northern Section during the war of '61. As engineers of the telegraph corps they are detailed by General Grant to undertake a hazardous spying mission in Richmond, an assignment that had proved a fatal one to other Union men before them. Dix, in the uniform of the Confederate captain he impersonates, is a romantic and thrilling figure. The picture has beautiful photography, a convincing battle scene, a classic old southern homestead, with its ladies in crinolines, and its cheerful darkies; the fair heroine is a joy to the eye; and the exciting moments in the telegraph office, with the service in the hands of a spy, furnish enough high moments for any motion picture. This is excellent family audience entertainment without a suggestive word or line and with much of charm to recommend it.

1. What was the war of '61?
2. What problem confronted the armies of the North at the time this picture opened?
3. What famous Union General appears in the picture?
4. Where did the words Union and Confederate come from, and what did they mean?
5. Where is Richmond?
6. Why was the capture of Richmond important?
7. Describe the camp as it appeared at night.
8. What does the word bivouac mean?
9. What was the difference in the uniforms of the North and the South?
10. Describe the battle scene on the fields outside of Richmond.
11. What did the soldiers use for artillery?
12. How did the fighting lines protect themselves without trenches?
13. Describe the Richmond telegraph office.
14. Describe the southern mansion depicted in this film.
15. Name ten items in this lovely old home that you particularly noticed.
16. Tell the story of the plot of the picture to the class.
17. What was the climax?
18. Is the most exciting moment of a picture and the climax always the same?
19. What was the most famous song of the soldiers of the North; and of the South?
20. What did you like best about this picture?

Write a 250 word composition on "The Telegraph in Peace and in War."

Surrender

Fox

Stars: Warner Baxter, Leila Hyams.

"Surrender" is the dramatic story of life in a German prison camp, during the World war. It is based on Pierre Benoit's play, "Axelle," and tells the story of a group of American prisoners who have been dragged into the German camp, where there is little food, severe discipline, but a lack of the brutality that was one of the lurid stories of the war. One sees in this picture the German side of the conflict, their suffering, self-sacrifice, and devoted loyalty to their country. The action of the play takes place largely in an old feudal castle, where the Count, an old German soldier who fought in the Prussian war and has sent his four sons out to battle, losing three of them in the first year, gives us some idea of the horror and hardship that Germany faced bravely. This picture is important as one link in the chain of international understanding and amity. It is not suitable for young children but is strong clean entertainment for high school and college students.

1. What phase of the World War does this picture represent?
2. Describe the German prison camp.
3. Describe the characteristics of five prisoners you particularly noted. (This is an excellent opportunity for characterization in composition.)
4. What was the noticeable difference between the German captain and the French captain prisoner?
5. Describe the old castle.
6. What inconsistencies did you notice in the directing of this picture?
7. Tell the story of the attempted escape of the prisoners.
8. This picture is chiefly remarkable for its photographic night effects. Describe two instances that demonstrate this fact.
9. Did the prison camp seem to you a place of cruelty or a place of unavoidable hardship?
10. What work did they give the prisoners to do?
11. Which actor seemed to you to give the most brilliant performance?
12. What did you think of the character of Dietrich, the German count's youngest son?
13. Did he exhibit German brutality or German fineness of character?
14. Did you consider Captain Elbing a good soldier or a brute?
15. Why was he detailed as commander of the prison camp?
16. What three sound effects did you notice in this picture that gave it strong dramatic emphasis?
17. Tell in narrative form the story of the prisoners' second attempted escape.
18. What was the climax of this picture?
19. What bit of action was the most dramatic?
20. Do you consider this picture a success as an example of fine technique in directing; or of strong plot development?

Write a 300 word composition on "The Prison Camp."

WABASH AVENUE

CHICAGO

Margaret Bennett, former exhibitor at Whiting, Ind., so the story goes, was running through some old scrap books recently when she came across an ancient advertisement from the old Opera House at Monmouth, Ill. Under the list of attractions, whatever they were, the eye traveled down to the last line in bold face caps which read "Special—Steam Heat Tonight."

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

CHARLES E. "CHICK" LEWIS
Chairman and Editor

An International Association of Showmen Meeting in MOTION PICTURE HERALD
Every Week—for Mutual Benefit and Progress

CONDUCTED BY AN EXHIBITOR FOR EXHIBITORS

Don't Repeat Too Often!

THERE is a tendency to over-exploit theatres and pictures or duplicate stunts. This particularly applies to circuit houses and groups which are supervised by men who feel that any let-up may put them in wrong with their superiors.

While this department has always tried to encourage and suggest exploitation and tie-ups of various kinds, we are dead against over-doing it. It stands to reason that too much of anything can prove detrimental in accomplishing the very goal you set out for.

A smart showmen knows when, and how often, he should solicit or contact his local merchants, organizations, etc., for the purpose of a co-operative tie-up. He also knows that the pitcher can be broken if it goes to the well too often. The pitcher, in this case, is your friendly relations with the tradespeople and newspapers. Approach them every week or two and they will soon grow suspicious that they are holding the bag. Then when something really worth while happens along, they are not receptive.

There are a sufficient variety of ideas for exploiting a theatre and its attractions without duplicating any one idea less than four to eight weeks apart. A showman whose experience and ability does not provide him with that many merchandising slants is 'way behind the times and in danger of being headed towards the "exit" sign.

We would venture to say that a careful perusal of our Club pages each week would reveal enough logical selling ideas to keep something new breaking all the time and rarely a repetition short of two or three months apart. We don't have to guess at this statement; we have the word of about a thousand showmen to back it up.

Make every campaign sufficiently different from the last so that it stands out as new as the change of your program.

This may sound funny, but honestly, we can't laugh:—One of the large circuits held a pep meeting to get their managers started on plans for the Unemployment Shows; at the conclusion of the meeting the managers were informed that all assistant managers were to be let out the following Sunday night.

While mentioning Unemployment and Relief, we are wondering whether all those showmen out of jobs will get any help or relief during the present slack period. Sort of recalls that bit about "Charity beginning at home."

We were recently taken to task because, as an international organization, we had no "plank." We have none, but we do favor the following:

One full day off each week for the manager.

Periodical salary increases.

Two weeks' vacation with pay.

No transferring or switching without manager's full consent.

At least two weeks' notice.

Promotions from the organization and not from the outside.

If we've overlooked a few, tip us off and we will rectify it "toot sweet."

As a theatrical season is figured, we don't get any too many brisk-business months. In many localities the best days are right ahead of you. For Christmas until the first spell of warm weather, except where Lent hurts the box office, you can count it at the "home stretch" for bringing your house into the big money class. During that period you must not only operate without a loss, but accumulate a large enough surplus to cover a fair return on the house itself and carry you through the summer as well.

With any kind of a break in good product there is no reason in the world why the great majority of theatres can't do an exceptional business. Map out your "home stretch" plans with a view of not only keeping your present patronage, but getting back most of the old ones who drifted, or have been driven away from theatres.

Quite often a member reads about some outstanding campaign on our pages and bemoans the fact that he has already played the picture. So he passes it up altogether.

Don't do that. Remember, every campaign described on these pages can be revamped to fit other pictures than the one on which it was used. Just file it away for use on the next attraction you have which lends itself to that particular type of exploitation. Ditto for newspaper ads and other show-selling slants.

My remark about Florida bore fruit. Two of our members have invited me to spend some time with them this winter. I hate to mention this; but they forgot to say whether they would furnish transportation . . . ? Hi Ho. Looks like a cold winter ahead. "CHICK"

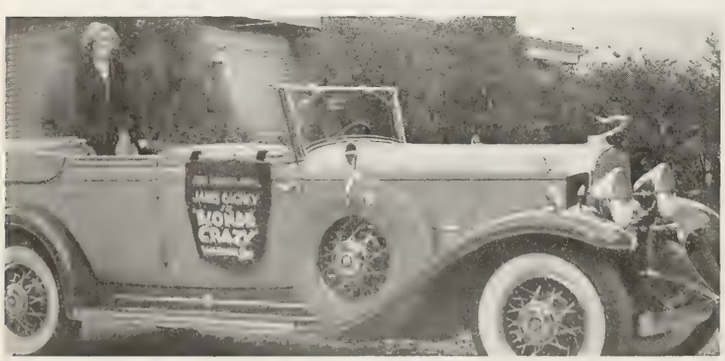
Patrons Demand Foreign Product—?



Magazzu Obtained Big Return From Essay Gag On Film

A total of 3,700 essays were submitted by scholars of Hazleton, Pa., schools as the result of an essay stunt put over by P. A. Magazzu, manager of the Grand Theatre when exploiting "Alexander Hamilton." Taking into consideration the student enrollment of approximately 4,000, it will be seen that this number represents a tremendous response from the students on the subject. The essays were confined to 300 words.

In appreciation of the tie-up all the school instructors were invited to attend the initial showing of the picture. The newspaper and merchants also co-operated by working up a co-op page, giving the theatre a good break in heading and in every ad. This, coupled with the school tie-up, gave the picture a wide range of publicity. Regarding the essay stunt, the scholars were rewarded with suitable gifts and guest tickets.

Activities of Magazzu are regularly presented in this department and this is just another instance to show you all that this showman and Round Tabler is forever on his job. 3,700 returns out of a possible 4,000 is going pretty strong, we think. How about some more records from other members of this outfit?

DE LUXE BALLYHOO IN MEMPHIS!

When exploiting "Blonde Crazy," Howard Waugh, manager of the Warner Theatre in Memphis, Tenn., promoted the use of a de luxe model auto and enlisted the services of an attractive blonde to act as occupant while the car was driven through the city streets. The sign on the forward door reads, "One Reason Why James Cagney Is Blonde Crazy—Warner Now."

Giveaways Promoted By Koblegard A Big Boost To Business

Along with an application for membership in this Club sent by Rupert N. Koblegard, manager of the New Sunrise Theatre, Fort Pierce, Fla., came a couple of photos and notes on two exploitation stunts he put over not so very long ago.

Last August was designated as Grand Prize Month and he promoted articles which totaled approximately $1,500 value. In addition to two round trip tickets to Havana, Cuba, you will note by photo that the awards included a Ford Sedan, a kitchen cabinet, a well known electric radio and an electric refrigerator. These articles were given away in the usual fashion on Friday nights.

The other photo shows a 250-pound cake baked by a local concern on the occasion of the theatre's Third Anniversary of the installation of W. E. Sound Equipment. The two young men in the foreground of the photo are the boys who baked the cake. In the background on the right is J. K. Walker, Mayor of Fort Pierce and president of the baking company; and on the left, in background, is Koblegard himself.

Everyone of the above mentioned give-aways is a costly and nationally advertised article which most anyone would be mighty proud to own. That's the reason that this stunt was a big success from every angle. Patrons knew that they were shooting at something worthwhile. His other stunt is an instance of what can be done with an occasion such as a third anniversary of sound installation with the proper ballyhoo.

Kendall's Costume Party Big Success With The Kiddies

File this one away for next season if you do not have occasion to adapt it to some holiday affair, but we may as well record right now that a lot of Warner theatre managers found that costume parties, with prizes for best costumes, were the most popular affairs staged in observance of Hallowe'en.

For instance, F. M. Kendall, manager of the Empress Theatre in Owensboro, Ky., planned and executed one of these parties for his Kiddie Klub and it turned out to be the biggest thing his house has known in a long time. The affair was held at the morning showing on Hallowe'en, with the children marching through the streets from their homes to the theatre. Some of the costumes were so funny that people followed the youngsters right to the door of the theatre. The house was jammed when it came time to judge.

There are many other little novelties which can be applied to these occasions, such as the distribution of jack-o'-lanterns, masks and toys; and remember, as we stated above, Hallowe'en isn't the only time of the year that the Kiddies can be counted upon to patronize an event of this kind. Thanksgiving, Christmas and New Years are all appropriate for costume parties.

Sheridan Put Over Novel Stunt When Selling "Bad Girl"

One week in advance of the opening of "Bad Girl" at the Des Moines Theatre, Des Moines, Iowa, Manager H. S. Sheridan placed a large electrically lighted letter B on the corner of the Iowa Building, which has a prominent location in the city. An additional letter was put up each day, until at the end of the seventh day the complete title, BAD GIRL, was spelled out.

On the morning of the opening day an additional announcement that the picture was current at the Des Moines Theatre was added to the seven electric letters. This sign stayed up during the run of the picture.

That was a corking stunt engineered by Sheridan and he deserves all kinds of credit for selling the idea to the owners of the building. Thanks to him for getting it to the Club's attention, and we trust that others will be able to cash in with a lot of good publicity from his suggestion.

Brown Enlisted Aid From Public Schools To Sell Marine Film

An attractive foyer display and a marine life gag for children were effective publicity aids for H. C. Brown, manager of the Rivoli Theatre in Greenville, S. C., when exploiting "Fifty Fathoms Deep."

The foyer display consisted of of a man dressed in diver's suit and helmet, watching display and giving out heralds at the peak hours. The display also included a six-sheet mounted on beaver-board, grey moss, and two large tables showing splendid specimens of deep sea life and plants, including sea-horses, octupuses, star fish, turtles, etc.

Participation in the marine-life gag was open to all children and they were invited to list as many different forms of fish, marine growth, etc., as possible, numbering them neatly and signing names and addresses. Guest tickets were given to the kids as a reward for their efforts. The newspaper sponsored the gag and followed it up with stories for its duration.

The children's questionnaire was unusually interesting and instructive for the kiddies and resulted in worthwhile publicity through schools and via newspaper. Brown is an enterprising member of this organization and we would like to know more about what he's doing in the show-selling business.

OUR WEEKLY LAUGH— A NEW KIND OF BIOGRAPHY

William Howard Solomon Waugh . . . there's a name to conjure with! Believe it or not, the Solomon part reflects his direct descent from the famous king who bore the name. Likewise history informs us that some of Solomon's descendants migrated to Russia where William Howard was born, in Moscow, on April Fools' Day, in the year 1776.

Howard Waugh ? ? ?

When he was two weeks old, owing to an infraction of child etiquette quite common among all youngsters, his grandmother became angered and bashed him on the head with a squeeze-box, thus centering his youthful mind on show-business. So, after completing a course in the Moler Barber College and Marinelle School, we find him entering the amusement game at the age of six weeks. (He had landed in this country at this stage.)

You'd be surprised to know what theatre circuits he has been connected with in subsequent years and the circuitous route he has pursued relative to these connections. This information is of a too personal nature to impart at this time, so we'll leave it to the imagination. While trials and tribulations have left a furrow here and there upon his noble brow, note by the above photo that he is still his old smiling self and that he attributes this to the fact that he eats an apple every day (see photo).

Despite the fact that he is the recognized manager of the Warner Theatre down in old Memphis, Tenn., he claims that he's really never managed a theatre. Some day, he sez, he'll take a shot at it. In answer to a Round Table reporter's query as to whether there was any thought in his mind that he'd ever leave this game for another, it was disclosed that his mind had ceased to function. However, he manages to get by down in his town, where he is familiarly known as "Old Doc Memphis Himself" and "Old Walrus'.

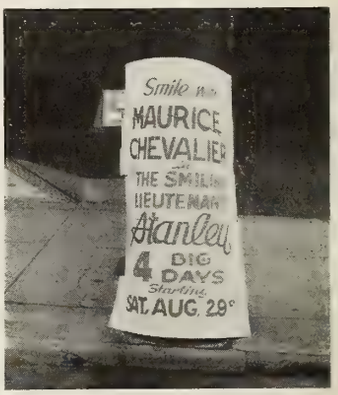
Fleming Offered A Chance For Public To Determine Score

Skill in determining the outcome of a football game between Notre Dame and Drake a week previous to opening of "Spirit of Notre Dame," formed the idea behind a successful exploitation stunt used recently by John C. Fleming, manager of the Capitol Theatre, Brownsville, Texas. Co-operation was secured from the local newspaper in the matter of publicity, scene cuts from the picture on the sports pages and free write-ups in other sections.

The stunt was a natural for a football-minded public and the large number of scores submitted proved that it was a popular diversion. Naturally, it focussed attention on the picture playing the Capitol. Persons submitting the scores were given guest tickets to the picture. As in all cases of this kind, the latter were held down to as small number as possible. Practically all showmen are familiar with the method of handling these affairs so it will not be necessary to present detailed information.

Weaver Gave People Sight Of Real Money As Plug For Picture

Basing his stunt on the idea that but few people had ever seen $15,000 dollars in cash all at one time, L. P. Weaver, manager of the Rialto Theatre in Phoenix, Ariz., arranged for a window display of real money when exploiting "Alexander Hamilton." The trick, as far as money was concerned, was that there was actually only $1,000 in ten dollar bills in sight, despite the sign which read, "Did You Ever See $15,000?" However, $1,000 in bills can look like a lot of money.



The bills, together with a number of money sacks, were placed in a prominent store window on the main business thoroughfare and a one-sheet card and stills sold Alexander Hamilton as the first treasurer, etc. The money was insured by a local insurance firm at no cost to theatre other than an announcement card in the window. The window was used for about six hours—and during the busiest time of the day. During the time it was in the window it was arranged to have two policemen stand guard.

It's needless to state that Weaver attracted attention with this stunt, particularly in these days of scant money, and the public always gives a look at uniformed guards. In addition to publicity gained from window gazers, the morning paper carried a two-column story the following day about the display.

Hart Pulled Fast One On City When Cops Were Asleep

Continuing to inform readers about recent campaigns engineered by Ed M. Hart, manager of the Stanley Theatre, Utica, N. Y., this time we'll tell you how he put over "The Smiling Lieutenant." As usual, all of Utica knew that the picture was due in town.

On the night before the picture opened every traffic pole in the business section bore a big placard, such as you see in the accompanying photo, reading "Smile With Maurice Chevalier in 'The Smiling Lieutenant'." In all, 50 of the cards were planted during the night and the shot of this one was taken about 6 A. M., before the local police began to wonder what the stunt was all about. A few were ordered down but the majority were allowed to remain all through the engagement. The newspaper used the gag, along with a photo of one of the poles captioned, "This Is Smiling Time: The Stanley Theatre Management Picked on Baggs Square Traffic Light Standards to Invite More Smiles to the Showing of "Smiling Lieutenant'."

He also tied up with a photographer to take pictures of all people who wished to submit their very nicest smiles. The newspaper carried a generous reader on the stunt, pointing out that, "Smiles May Win Way to Stanley." Guest tickets figured in the effort. There was also a long notice announcing that the newsboys had been invited to be guests of the theatre on a certain day.

A street ballyhoo, consisting of a man dressed as "The Smiling Lieutenant," paraded the business section of the town during engagement of picture and distributed envelopes inscribed, "Secrets." Inside was inserted a card reading, "Sh! For your information, you have only to and including Tuesday night to see Maurice Chevalier in 'The Smiling Lieutenant' at the Stanley Theatre, after more than a year's run on Broadway, New York City."

Additional effort included the use of a bulletin board in front of the theatre, on which was posted clippings and pictures from various papers that carried favorable criticism on picture; another bulletin board for display of some 30 "smiling Uticans," as the result of the stunt played up in the paper; the distribution of heralds in local and New York papers; a 24-sheet of Chevalier hung from marquee; advertisements on bags of "Liberty Boys"; ads on three buses traveling in and out of town, and the plugging of songs from the show over a local radio broadcasting station. People were asked to name titles of songs and receive guest tickets. The other photo shows Hart's famous "Busy Corner," which he uses for poster display at base and slide projection at top of building.

Next time we'll tell you what Hart did to sell "Personal Maid."

Connor Promoted An Oil Burning Heater At No Cost To House

Apparently there's no end to what can be promoted by an enterprising theatre manager and this time we'll have to present the brown derby to M. E. Conner, manager of the Manor Theatre in Philadelphia, for the feat of acquiring without cost to house a $400 oil-burning furnace and 250 gallons of fuel oil. Not only did he promote the furnace, but in addition secured free installation of all equipment in the home of the theatre patron who walked away with this coveted article.

What made this promotional stunt stand out was that there were a flock of homeowners within a radius of a mile of the theatre who were not averse to owning a new oil-burner. The excitement regarding it was intense and, from a standpoint of attracting patronage to the theatre, it was a huge success. It's hardly necessary to explain how the deal was handled as we feel that all Club members are by this time entirely familiar with the method.

Janecky's Premier Show Was A Booster On A Current Film

Aware of the drawing power of "Five Star Final," Harold Janecky, manager of the Warner Theatre in Milwaukee, Wis., decided to ballyhoo the premier showing with a special performance the night prior to opening day.

Accordingly, the box office was closed at six o'clock on the last day of the current attraction and the marquee was completely redressed for the new picture, a particularly large flash being used for the occasion. Following an advance sale, tickets went on sale at the box office at seven o'clock and when the nine o'clock show went on the house was entirely sold out. One of the accompanying photos shows a portion of the lobby and the long line of patrons awaiting for the show to open. Extra large spots were used to cover the entire theatre front. The rear of the theatre was also strikingly set off with strong spots playing on a display of large posters.

Other advance activities consisted of a tie-up made with a local radio station, which installed a "mike" at the theatre front for a half-hour broadcast as the crowds were entering; and another tie-up made with an evening newspaper, whereby a special fly-sheet on "Five Star Final" was handed out on the streets at eleven o'clock. Note by another photo that still another deal was made with the proprietor of a local ladies' clothing store. Eight models were sent over to the theatre where they paraded in the foyer, lending additional color and atmosphere. You will also be able to see the huge cut-out head of Robinson in the background.

There can be little question about the publicity value of a premier showing such as the above, for it had everyone in the city talking about the picture and subsequent box office returns testified to the good work engineered by Janecky and his able publicity manager, Benny Katz. The Warner did such sensational business the first week that this picture was in that it was held for another week's stand.

Both Jancky and Katz have been adding to their reputations at this Milwaukee house, the former with his keen sense of showmanship and the latter with his flair for doing the right thing along publicity lines. Their work is not new to Club readers and it is our hope that the future will bring forth many other interesting contributions from these two learned showmen.

NEW YEAR'S EVE SHOW!

All set? Have you started selling tickets for that special midnight performance? Have you lined up your extra attractions, stage numbers (if any) and all the other trimmings to make this a grand gala event for your theatre and community?

Naturally, all the live-wire showmen are ready and will play to a packed house. Get behind the idea solidly. Let them know that this year's New Year Eve show is going to outclass every previous event. Make certain that they know what a good time is in store for them. Sell them on the idea that your theatre is the place to "ring out the old and ring in the new."

See that such novelties or other gags for the show are ordered well in advance and on hand long before the 31st. If you delay you may be left holding the bag and the customers sore as the devil because you did not give them what you advertised.

If you've got an organ, get yourself an organist for some community singing. They go for that strong on these New Year's Eve shows. Slides will help them along still more.

Your screen fare should be light and full of comedy. No one wants to sit through a morbid, or heavy drama. Plenty of giggles and laughs are what you should get plenty of.

Local talent on the stage might be good, if they don't razz them too much. Watch this slant closely. Don't take chances unless you're darned sure of yourself. The home-town dance orchestra may be an idea too. Seek out and select the best angles to make your show outstanding in every way. If there is more than one show in your town, it's up to you to make yours the better of the two.

Falkinburg Thinks Fall Fashion Show Is A Trade Booster

Having recently completed the staging of two highly successful Fall Style Shows, R. E. Falkinburg, owner-manager of the Majestic Theatre in Lexington, Neb., is moved to express his enthusiasm for this sort of business stimulator in most glowing terms. You will note that some new angles are incorporated.

His first show was an evening affair which catered to mixed crowds and combined an exclusive ladies' ready-to-wear store and an exclusive men's store. The models mingled on the stage in a manner which was pleasing to the audience and this show was so popular that it had to be repeated the following night.

But the real kick, he states, came when he presented a "Matinee for Ladies' and Misses' Only Style Show." All the models appeared on the stage in negligee, pajamas and all of those fussy garments intimately associated with women's wear. The stage setting was entirely in keeping with a style show. "Did it draw?" he goes on. "I'll say it did! It was the talk of the town for a whole week."

And so Falkinburg is shooting his "all women" show idea along for his brother showmen to use, with the advice to go to it and reap their share from a stunt that provided excellent results for his box-office. He used "Tabu" as a feature picture for this show and states that it went over well with all the ladies. Thanks for your tip, R. E., and be sure to send along some more.

Eddie Selette Busy As Usual Selling Portsmouth Shows

Eddie Selette, manager of the Arcadia Theatre in Portsmouth, N. H., is still keeping the ball rolling merrily along over his way with a number of show-selling gags. Recently, he stimulated business the first four days of the week by engineering the give-away of a three-piece parlor set. This was handled in the usual give-away fashion, so we will not go into any detail on this part of the subject. The awards are made on Thursday. One of the regular features of these nights is the give-away of 25 boxes of a popular brand of candy, promoted, of course.

Other recent activities of his include the issue of a special institutional herald on occasion of the Arcadia's first anniversary, with inside spread devoted to a review of what the theatre had featured in the way a product, give-aways and other activities during the past year; a special herald when the Carnera-Sharkey fight pictures were shown, and another special herald headed, "Warning—Portsmouth Alarmed"—there followed an account of how a disease known as "Blue-itis" had broken out in town and that great care must be taken to prevent contagion. A sure-cure was to make a visit to the Arcadia, etc.

It wasn't so long ago we told you that Selette was having considerable success with his book cover ads in a circulating library. For his benefit, as well as others, we call attention to a cover that is being manufactured by a leading book cover concern that is adjustable for all school books and comes complete with theatre imprinting. Where a plug among school children is desired, this appears to be a corking method of exploitation, when distribution is made by the teachers.

Selette has been working like a Trojan for quite some time to put the Arcadia over the top in the face of tough opposition and from all accounts he is making a good job of it through the use of one selling gag after another. Every week some kind of a tie-up is made or new kind of herald distributed.

Harrison Trying A Get-Acquainted With Theatre Staff Idea

J. B. Harrison, manager of the Fenway Theatre, Boston, Mass., is trying something new and novel in theatre advertising that is proving to be an excellent institutional stunt.

There are two girl cashiers at the Fenway. Life-size photo enlargement cut-outs have been made of each one—with the cashiers holding a 22 x 28 on which is copy relative to the current or forthcoming picture. This idea serves two definite purposes; one to advertise the picture and the other an effort to get more intimately acquainted with the public and to give them that feeling of coming to a place where they know a part of the personnel of the theatre.

The idea is meeting with splendid success as has been already evidenced by the number of favorable comments.

Harris, Showman Of England Joins Our Club; Sends A Gag

There is an organization of theatre managers over in England called "The Select Circle" and to secure a certificate of membership one must qualify by turning out an outstanding example of showmanship. A sort of a Round Table, you understand, only much smaller than this organization and conducted somewhat differently. The stunts that made it possible for H. Z. Harris, general manager of the Exchange Cinema, Lincoln, Eng., to become a member resulted from a campaign he made on "Jazz Mad."

Sold on the idea that the title offered plenty of exploitation possibilities, he began to plug it with slides five weeks ahead of teaser campaign in the newspapers. Copy used for the teasers included, "Who Is Getting Jazz Mad? Who Is Likely to Get Jazz Mad? Who Has Got Jazz Mad?" etc. For another stunt, he and his musical director composed a catchy melody named after the title and this was consistently plugged long before the picture was shown. A hand-bill was also widely distributed around town with a message directed to all local composers, asking if they would like to have their own compositions played in public.

Much attention was also obtained with a street ballyhoo of an auto draped with a banner merely lettered with the title. A very attractive girl sat on the roof of the car and her three escorts perched themselves around the hood playing "ukes," while another leaned out of the window beating a big base drum. Music shops were also tied up for windows and a deal was made with a radio store for the broadcast of jazz music.

Another stunt recently pulled by Harris, which to our way of thinking was a corker, was the issue of a one-sheet headed in large red type, "Public Apology." Date followed and then in very readable, bracketed black type, "The Manager of the Exchange Kinema Apologizes for the Fact That He Is Unable by Mere Words to Sufficiently Express the Brilliant and Outstanding Entertainment Offered by Jeannette MacDonald and Jack Buchanan in Paramount's Greatest Musical Comedy Success Since 'Love Parade.'" "Monte Carlo," also in red, was stretched across the bottom.

The accompanying photo shows a ballyhoo auto which claimed its share of attention in a recent carnival procession. Note that the roof is so constructed as to permit manipulation of the grotesque figure.

The Club is mighty glad to have Harris for a representative over in Lincoln and we are sure that he will be able to furnish other very interesting contributions to this department. A vest pocket program he is using discloses that the unemployed are admitted to his house for 4d., the regular admission being 6d. and 9d., so it's apparent that show-business has its trials and tribulations in all parts of the globe.

STILL TIME FOR THIS ONE!

Advertise a Santa Claus special show for the afternoon of the 24th. Here's how to go about it:

Circularize all the school kids and give it a prominent play on your screen and in your lobby. Announce that every kiddie attending this special matinee will receive a Christmas package from Santa Claus.

Secure a large assortment of small toys, novelties and candy; put them up in packages for boys and for girls; dress up a Santa Claus.

Unless you slip up somewhere along the line, we'll almost guarantee a sell-out with plenty of standees besides. That's how certain we are that this one can be put over profitably.

Cost? Not so much. Holiday candy can be secured through your local confectioner for the advertising or for a healthy cut in the wholesale price. Shouldn't cost you more than a few cents a pound, top. The toys and novelties to be distributed via the packages are the kind that you can secure from your nearest jobber or through Club headquarters dealers' list. Each package will stand you not more than about five cents. Yep, it can be done for that, and you should have no trouble getting fifteen cents or more for the admission to this special matinee.

Time is short, so work fast and pull that 24th out of a deep hole and you'll find it will show a profit on the day.

Watson Sought Aid From Boys Club As Plug For Kid Film

Not losing sight of the fact that "Penrod and Sam" carried a strong appeal for youngsters, boys clubs and kindred organizations, George M. Watson, manager of the State Theatre in Wichita Falls, Texas, made arrangements with a local club to hold a parade in order to exploit this picture. As an inducement for the boys to enter the parade, an offer was made of a month's pass to the one who lead the homliest dog.

The boys carried banners on the picture and were led by a vanguard of local police and boys' bands. The stunt was a big success from every angle and helped stir up a lot of comment to popularize the picture as a box-office attraction.

All of which offers further proof that the youngsters and their organizations are valuable assets for any theatre when it comes to obtaining publicity at small cost to house. A few passes here and there and they will go out and plug for you and get your message across, just as it worked out for Watson.

Another successful exploitation stunt recently used by Watson to plug "Phantom of Paris" was the identification of an unmasked person who had appeared on the streets masked as the picture character. A tie-up with a department store and a newspaper made the scheme interesting, since it was necessary to have a copy of the paper in hand when tapping the person on the shoulder and his movements were routed through certain streets and in the store. Passes were offered for identification.

BUNDLE CHECKING!

You can render a real service if you open up that long neglected checkroom and use it for the few weeks before Christmas for the purpose of checking bundles for patrons attending your show.

Advertise the idea widely and see that such items as are checked are carefully handled. Plug it likewise through your newspaper ads, trailer and house program.

Many of your patrons will want to see the show after doing some shopping. If they were impressed with such a service they would not attempt to take their bundles home before coming to the theatre and possibly changing their minds about seeing the show once they got home.

LUSTIG'S LATEST SEAT-SELLER!

In between his efforts to ease the quarrels between lovers, writing a book on Fortune Telling (in his own inimitable manner) and numerous and sundry other outbursts, Dave Lustig, ad and pub. chief for the Manhattan Playhouses does turn out some grand money-making circulars, or what-have-you. In fact, his mind is so set on creating new slants along these lines that the other day we stepped on his toe and he never looked up to see who committed this offence.

But, kidding aside, here is his latest seat-selling gag. It's a neat circular, measuring about eight by ten inches and printed on good super stock. The idea is best explained by reading through the circular and if it offers an idea to you to work on for your own theatre, great, if not, what have you lost by looking it over?

It's no lead-pipe cinch to create stunts or campaigns for neighborhood theatres in cities as large as New York, and mighty few showmen have been successful in so doing, so Dave really deserves a lot of credit for the fine work he is doing for Manhattan Playhouses. Incidentally, if you can't get along with your better half, write Dave and ask for a copy of his "Advice to the Lovelorn." Honest, he wrote that one, too. O. K. Dave?

How Harry D. Stearn Presented His Idea Of A Stage Wedding

Stage weddings are nothing new to the industry, but they still pack the houses whenever one of these weddings takes place. The latest theatre to profit on this stunt was the American Theatre of Pittston, Pa., managed by Harry D. Stearn, who went to quite some extra efforts to make this stage wedding a bit different from others.

The "show" opened with a miniature wedding of the Painted Dolls, portrayed by 15 dancing school pupils from a nearby town; the children doing the wedding, singing and dancing. Then a woman soloist behind palms sang "O Promise Me." Then the march of the bridal cortege, followed by a ring bearer—a child about 2½ years old, then six flower girls, the groom and best man, then four bridesmaids and ushers, and then the bride and her brother with two little girls carrying the veil.

The bride and groom were the recipients of many useful gifts which were promoted by the theatre: A diamond ring, a wedding ring, a wrist watch, bride's veil and gown, dressing of the four bridesmaids, five pairs of shoes, a dress suit and traveling suit, loan of four tuxedos, a kitchen set, a living room suite, a bedroom suite, two traveling bags, a radio, traveling dress, round trip bus tickets to New York and a bridal suite at a New York City hotel.

The subject of stage weddings has often came up for discussion in this department and the idea is one that has been consistently plugged from various angles. Maybe some of you haven't tried this stunt for a long time and will find the time ripe to go out and promote one of these popular attractions. Stearn apparently did the job in apple-pie order, and we like his style of presentation. We still have some bulletins setting forth a complete plan, and if any Round Tabler would care to have one, drop headquarters a line.

Clark Carrying On At Baltimore Met With Several Gags

This is the first opportunity we've had to acquaint Club members with what has been going on at the Metropolitan Theatre in Baltimore, Md., since Charles O. Clark relieved Walter Morris of the management of this well known house. Morris, you will recall, was promoted to a district post in Hagerstown; and, of course, it has taken Clark a little time to get set in his new location. At any rate, here is a line on what he did in connection with showings of three recently-played pictures.

For advance work on "Tabu" a tie-up was made with the American Legion for the insertion of copy pertaining to picture in 1,000 programs, and 500 window cards were placed at regular points. A local radio station was also used one week in advance for broadcasting news of the picture. A neighborhood stunt which caused favorable comment was the distribution of 3,000 'neighborhood policy" programs, with ad on back cover to take care of cost. These programs were tied in with a bulletin posted in the theatre lobby, whereby a patron might secure a guest ticket for the following attraction. A dealer in popular priced autos was also tied-up with for a flat bottom truck to carry two Hula dancers on opening day and second day of attraction. This bally paraded around the city in the afternoon and early evening. The small photo on this page shows how the Met's front was dressed.

The other photo shows the atmospheric front designed for "Huckleberry Finn," with cut-out heads of kids looking over a white-washed fence. Also note the large cut-out heads strung across the entire front. As in connection with "Tabu," 500 window cards were sniped; the radio station was used; and again the neighborhood policy programs were brought into play. A special pass, entitling a child under twelve years of age to gain admission, when presented with 15 cents, resulted in the largest matinee attendance in many weeks. These were distributed to school children.

Practically the same stunts as described above were used to exploit "Alexander Hamilton," with the exception that a huge street banner was suspended at an important intersection four days in advance of playdate and during run of picture, and the rush out of 5,000 handbills, carrying photo of Arliss, on a Tuesday, which resulted in an immediate increase in receipts.

We note that Clark is pinning considerable faith in distribution of his "neighborhood policy" programs and trust we have conveyed the idea that has made this a popular gag. In case we have not, let us reiterate that guest tickets were the lure. We don't have to tell you how to do this. We're glad to get a line on the Met again and shall look forward to hearing further.

Warner Theatremen Put Arliss Picture Over Big In Philly

Some very effective work was carried out in Philadelphia, Pa., by William Goldman and his staff when exploiting the George Arliss film, "Alexander Hamilton," for its premiere showing at the Stanley Theatre, a house managed by L. P. Grayer. For four weeks prior to opening, Goldman and a special force sent out from the home office collaborated in a campaign which interlaced the story of the film with the history of the Quaker City. The result was a real opening.

One of the most outstanding and picturesque affairs connected with the advance campaign was the dancing of a minuet on the famed Independence Square in front of the old Hall. The photo on this page shows the twelve young society girls who executed the dance in costumes sent on from Hollywood. The event was covered by several sound news-reel companies and the pictures were shown the same evening in 200 theatres in the Philadelphia zone.

The photo at the top shows a well known sculptor making a bust of Arliss in Rittenhouse Square, noon-day periods of three days being selected to complete the bust. Crowds congregated around the sculptor as he worked on the bust, which, when completed, was placed on exhibition in a prominent show window.

Other stunts included a ground floor exhibit of Hamilton period costumes in one of the big stores; numerous newspaper tie-ups, among which was an arrangement made to run a strip of scenes each day; the enlistment of co-operation of all historical societies, and the wide distribution of advertising matter and the getting out of a special souvenir program for the premiere.

As the result of Goldman's campaign, reports have it that the first day's receipts topped the best figures obtained on any regular opening day for any picture ever shown at the Stanley.

DUNKING ETIQUETTE DEMONSTRATED!

A Dunking Contest was recently held in Los Angeles to develop the fine points of the intricate art. The Duncan Sisters were not present but the girl in the above photo (without hat) is Barbara Weeks, featured with Eddie Cantor in "Palmy Days," in which there is an obvious attempt to obtain further recognition for dunkers. Richard Moss is the manager of the U. A. Theatre, where the picture played.

BUILDING GOOD-WILL!

The majority of Parent-Teachers Association must operate practically without funds due to the fact that no provision is made for such purposes by local authorities. Which gives the wide-awake manager a golden opportunity of getting these powerful organizations behind the theatre.

Meet your local association and offer to run a special Saturday morning show, giving them the full receipts, less your bare operating expenses. The best method is to let them sell the tickets for such shows.

This kind of cooperation nets the P-T. Association some much-needed funds and nets your theatre the good-will and aid of the organization in sponsoring particular pictures, etc. In working with them 100 per cent you can also arrange previews to endorse some oncoming attraction which you want to plug in particular, besides opening up many other avenues for tying them into your various activities.

Many members of the Club have cited, from time to time, how valuable this angle is to the theatre, and showmen who have never tried it or have failed to even give it any thought will soon learn that they have been passing up a great medium for spreading worth-while propaganda for the theatre.

ROUND TABLE BIOGRAPHIES

The name of Martin G. Smith is a familiar one in both local and national theatre circles when associated with his activities as first president of the M.P.T.O. of Ohio, an aggressive member of the M. P. T. O. A. and an executive of the Toledo Amusement Managers' Association; and, in addition, general manager of Smith & Beidler Theatres, Toledo, Ohio.

Martin G. Smith

Smith was born in Toledo on March 30, 1892, and was first educated in local public schools. He then attended the Howe Military School in Howe, Ind., later entering Cornell University. He got his A.B. when taking a post-grad. course in Business Administration at the University of Michigan. He is a member of the Phi Kappa Sigma college fraternity; belongs to the University of Michigan Club; the Cornell Club; the University Club; the Rotary Club and is a member of the Toledo Chamber of Commerce, the Elks and Toledo Post No. 335, American Legion. He saw service in the Navy during the late war.

Show-business claimed his attention at the age of 21 because his father owned a theatre building at that time. Even though there may be a question as to whether he would retrace his steps were he to start all over again, the fact remains that his name has been closely identified with many important matters concerning the shaping of this industry and that he now occupies a high position in show-business in his city.

A Magazine Tie-Up Was Highlight Of Shirley's Campaign

An arrangement with the circulation manager of Liberty magazines in Schenectady, N. Y., whereby three thousand special photographs of Greta Garbo were inserted in all Liberty magazines on the Thursday before the opening of the picture, was the highlight of a campaign to put over "Susan Lenox, Her Fall and Rise" at the State Theatre in that city, managed by M. Shirley.

On the same day, there were two thousand photographs given with copies of the Morning Gazette. The serialization of the picture in form of Morning Telegraphs was also used in a quantity of two thousand. Fashion stills played the principal parts in a tie-up with five dress shops. Besides these extensive displays of Garbo stills, there were cards announcing the new film in each window of the dress shop. A still from the press-book, showing Clark Gable with a pipe, was used in connection with three United Cigar Stores. These attracted much attention.

Although the name of Shirley bears the initial "M," we wonder if by any chance this be the veteran showman Bill Shirley who used to be at the helm of the State in Schenectady several years ago, and who later engaged in various theatrical enterprises in and around his town. If this be the case, we'll gladly make a correction; however, in any event, we are glad to record that a Shirley is on the job.

THEATRE POSTER ART!

Drawn by BENTON L. JAMES

This week's contribution to the Poster Art series is a decided departure from the previous posters. This time we have a pen and ink sketch that lends itself perfectly for enlargement to fit most any sized frame. Furthermore, it can be used just as we show it in black and white instead of the usual splash of colors. That's something, too. Different and appealing to the eye.

Benton James is certainly proving that he knows poster art and how to make up eye-arresting fronts for the Missouri Theatre, St. Joseph, Mo.; the many posters already reproduced on the Club pages showed a variety of styles and effects and all were typical of present-day trends, in that they stressed the star angles without submerging the title or atmospheric background.

Next week's poster from James is a particularly effective design used by him for "Tabu." As usual, your theatre will find these posters mighty useful in dressing up the front.

Effective Tie Made By Ford With Radio And Public Schools

A three-cornered tie-up between radio, schools and theatre resulted in some excellent publicity for "Huckleberry Finn" when this picture played a return engagement at the Saenger Theatre, Shreveport, La., a house managed by Fred Ford. It was arranged with the announcer to tell the story of Huckleberry Finn during the children's radio hour for five days prior to showing. At the same time, the broadcaster stressed the admission price at theatre and mentioned coming attractions.

The school tie-up consisted of giving guest tickets to children who qualified 100 per cent in spelling during the month. This arrangement has become so popular with the teachers and children that it will be continued indefinitely.

Ford's good work resulted in direct returns to box office and a lot of word-of-mouth publicity, and it's a stunt that can be worked with any picture having special appeal to the youngsters. We do not recall receipt of other contributions from this showman and will look forward to hearing from him again.

Stunts Used By La Falce Helped Sell Hamilton Picture

The exploitation stunts that Frank La Falce put over in announcing the run of George Arliss in "Alexander Hamilton" at the Metropolitan Theatre in Washington, D. C., proved so effective that we are passing them along for the benefit of other managers, with the thought that they may also cash in.

From a well known book cover company La Falce secured several thousand of the "Alexander Hamilton" covers for use on school books. These were distributed in the schools. From a novelty firm in New York he secured the special Hamilton "mystery picture." This novelty made a great hit. One is asked to look at it steadily for a few moments and then rest the eyes on sky or wall and the picture appears greatly enlarged.

Another stunt was the distribution of the following letter to the children of the schools:

"Dear Mama and Papa: I have a big favor to ask of you. Teacher says that I will enjoy seeing 'Alexander Hamilton' with George Arliss at Warner Bros.' Theatre. It will also help me to make better marks in my history lessons. You know, dear parents, that it takes but 15 cents to see this great picture, so please let me have this small amount. Your Loving Child.

"P. S.—Teacher says that you will enjoy it a lot, too."

La Falce also found that the issuing of student tickets at a reduced rate and good only at matinees was effective in helping the afternoon showings. Regarding the names of the book cover company and the novelty firm, the Club will be glad to furnish these addresses upon request. The book covers are adjustable and can be used on any size school text book. Many are no doubt familiar with the novelty cards, but this one appears to have been made up especially for this picture.

ROUND TABLE BIOGRAPHIES

From usher to treasurer of a theatre in less than a year's time is quite a jump for any young man to make, but that's just what happened to John M. O'Connell since he began his career in showbusiness.

John O'Connell

John was born in Somerville, Mass., in the year of 1904 and received his education in local grammar and high schools. When he was 21 years of age the Metropolitan Theatre in Boston was ready for opening and the big house drew his attention. He got a job as usher and, as we stated above, rapidly rose to an executive position.

He acted as treasurer of the Met for slightly over a year and was then transferred to Omaha, Neb., as assistant manager of the Riviera Theatre. He then went to Minneapolis, where he held down the job of assistant at the Minnesota Theatre and later returned to Boston as assistant manager of the Met. From the Met he was transferred to the Washington Street Olympia in the same capacity, and shortly after was promoted to management of the Allston Theatre, Allston, Mass., his present position.

O'Connell is married and the father of three children, and from what we can learn is so content with his chosen profession that he has no intention of ever leaving it for another field.

SHOWMEN NEWSETTES FROM EVERYWHERE

BARRY SHEDD has replaced T. H. Stevens as manager of the RKO Theatre in Toledo, Ohio. Stevens has been called to New York where he will in all probability receive a new assignment. Richard Wright, former assistant manager of the RKO-Toledo, is in line for a manager's post in a Cincinnati house.

Tunstill Obtained Aid From Athletic Boards On Picture

Wholehearted co-operation from athletic boards of local schools and colleges gave Clayton Tunstill, manager of the Lyric Theatre, Brownwood, Texas, a fine opportunity to exploit "The Spirit of Notre Dame." Special permission was received from the school board to place a window card on the bulletin boards of every school in the city. This was sold on the idea that the picture depicted school life and was produced in the memory of Rockne and was a picture that every school child should see. The board made an exception in this instance by permitting Tunstill to place the cards on the bulletin boards.

Held a Meeting

One week in advance, the football coaches and managers were invited to a meeting in the manager's office at which time Tunstill explained to them the outstanding features of the picture and why each one of their teams should see it. The coaches and managers each received a pair of guest tickets—and they in turn reciprocated by telling everybody in their schools that it was a picture everybody should see. Tunstill also gave each coach ten window cards to be placed in the auditoriums, practice halls, mess halls and dormitories. A particular day and night was planned for each of the teams to be present and that these days would be known as Howard Payne, Daniel Baker and High School days.

Two days before opening of picture, the local college had a night game—scheduled with Austin College. Having secured permission from the President, and the Athletic Board, Tunstill gained access to the field and the grandstand during the game for exploitation purposes. Although an exception was made in this case, it was only because the picture pertained to college life and dedicated to Rockne.

Tunstill himself painted a banner (4ft x 12 ft) with the following: "Notre Dame's famous Four Horsemen appear with Lew Ayres and 12 other great football heroes in 'The Spirit of Notre Dame' dedicated to Knute Rockne, Lyric, Sunday, Monday, Tuesday." Big block letters were used, painted in black on white background so that it could be read plainly at night under the large lights that are used to light the field. On the night of the game, two boys dressed in football costumes, head gear and all, carried this banner—walking very slowly across the field directly in front of the main grandstand. They appeared after the first quarter, between halves and third quarter. In the meantime, the banner was placed against one of the light poles directly in front of the grandstand where it was plainly discernible to all.

Advertising Privileges

Prior to the game, Tunstill went out to the field and tacked window cards in conspicuous places all over the grandstand, entrances to the grandstand and on the light poles in front. Also, a 24-sheet was posted on the fence outside of the grandstand and two three-sheets near the gate entrances. This was the first time a sign of any kind was permitted to be posted or nailed on the fence.

Inasmuch as the junior team of one of the local colleges played the junior team of another college on the field Saturday afternoon, the same procedure took place as on the night before. There were about 700 people in attendance at this game

The above is a good example of the excellent exploitation possibilities that this picture, coming when it did, offered to many showmen. Several campaigns on this picture have come in up to this writing and we will present them in order. We'll say in advance, however, that if you haven't plugged it from all the several angles offered, then some one has muffed a good chance to cash in on a football-minded public. In the meantime, we'll await further word from Brownwood.

RUN-OF-THE-PAPER ADS!

Not so long ago we reproduced an ad on "Street Scene" created by H. E. Jameyson, director of Advertising and Publicity for the Midland Division of Fox Theatres. That ad was so effective, and different, that it brought no end of comment into Club headquarters and as a result we have been trying to cultivate Jameyson in an effort to get some more of his fine ads onto our pages.

Here we offer Mr. Jameyson's idea for "The Champ." There are many that may question the slant he's taken in preparing these ads for newspaper use. Some might argue that he's overlooking the pathos of the picture, the pathos that makes it one of the greatest screen offerings of this, yes and a couple of years. But there Jameyson has it it right on the "nut." What with talk of depression, everyone crying on someone's shoulder, even if they don't know what the devil they're crying about; these thoughts were uppermost in his mind when he created these ads. "Play up the comedy," that's his answer. The public must laugh. It's the only way they can keep off that cloak of fear that the calamity howlers are pushing over their shoulders all the time.

And we agree with Jameyson one hundred per cent. But enough of this argument over comedy slants or pathos, neglected. The important point is the ads themselves. Do you like 'em? We do. Picture them, if you will, on the news pages of your own local dailies. Remember, they were designed for use OFF the theatrical advertising page. Run of the paper. Sandwiched anywhere else but among amusement news. Get the idea? Great? We'll say so!

Glance at the ads. Then read the text. How do you like that combination? Will it bring patrons to the box office? You know the answers.

As a matter of fact, these two ads might be termed examples of how the thoughts and personality of an individual, in direct contrast to some method outlined in a mechanical manner, can be injected in copy in such a way to catch a wary reader. In other words, it is a different kind of advertising and that is what counts in these days of "smart" salesmanship.

Many thanks, Jameyson, for your courtesy in sending these on to me. Let's have more of your fine ads. They're mighty useful everywhere right now.

Steel Frame-Work Of Next Door Building Is Utilized By Laby

Paramount is building a large, modern theatre in Boston and George Laby, manager of the Washington Street Olympia Theatre, another Publix house, is using the steel work on the theatre site to excellent advantage in the matter of advertising attractions playing his theatre.

Actual check-up indicates that over 1,500 people pass this spot every hour during the day and approximately half that number in the evening. Another check-up by clicker has shown that upwards of 55 per cent of the passers-by were attracted by the huge cut-out he used in connection with the showing of "Bad Girl." This cut-out measured 35 feet long by 12 feet high and made a great flash. He also used a big banner measuring 35 feet long by 4 feet high.

This was a smart move on the part of Laby, for this advertising is getting far more circulation than he can obtain from the best newspaper in his town. However, George is ever on his toes in his town when it comes to taking full advantage of any good opportunity to publicize shows or theatre, so this latest advertising coup of his comes as no surprise to Club headquarters.

Schosberg Tied Up With Fire Laddies To Promote Serial

As a means of building up matinee business on Fridays and Saturdays, Milton A. Schosberg, manager of the State Theatre in Poughkeepsie, N. Y., booked a serial that had to do with fires and then went around and sold the chief of the local fire department the idea of lending a hand with exploitation. The serial was "Heroes of the Flames."

In order to get the serial off to a good start and build a maximum kiddie attendance, 100 free tickets were given to each fire house, and the firemen in turn passed out the ducats to every kid they met in the neighborhood. On the opening day, the kids assembled and headed by a parade of fire engines marched in a body to the theatre. As they passed into the house, each one received a membership card that entitled them to see the last episode free of charge if the other 11 numbers, marking the different episodes, were all punched. During the presentation of the first episode, the fire chief was on hand and gave a lecture to the kids on fire prevention.

Hilgendorf Repays Past Favors With Gags That Won Out

A reader of this department for a long time, Ted Hilgendorf, manager of the Ritz Theatre, Milwaukee, Wis., intimates that he's neglected long enough the simple act of becoming a member of this Club and backs up his good intentions by sending along a letter to this effect and a batch of show gags that have helped him exploit a number of shows. He does this in a first attempt to repay others for the help he has received through these pages.

You can see for yourselves that atmospheric ballyhoos were extensively used by him when stunting "Cimarron," one of the accompanying photos showing an old-fashioned, high-wheeled wagon, with cooking utensils attached and a banner strung across both sides to advertise the picture. The other photo shows a miniature covered wagon parade, participated in by a bunch of kiddies with white cloth arched across their express carts. Quaint costumes lent to the general scheme.

Other interesting activities included a tie-up with some twenty merchants on the occasion of the Ritz's 5th Birthday party, which entailed the give-away of many valuable articles of merchandise at the theatre; the issue of a special herald for "Laff Week," when a special selection of pictures was presented (a credit line at bottom for a merchant took care of cost); the imprint of the same type set-up used for vest-pocket program on paper bags at grocery store; a "Warning" herald on "Fair Warning," stating that a certain night was the last opportunity to see the picture, and a personal letter, mimeographed in long hand, to the lady of the house on "War Nurse."

WATCH THE TEMPERATURE!

Did you ever know that once a person gets chilled in the auditorium of a theatre they can never warm up again during that particular stay?

Well, it's a fact nevertheless. So bear that in mind at all times. Be absolutely certain that the house is warm and comfortable before it is opened to the public each and every day.

Experienced showmen know that a cold house will drive more people away than all the best pictures can possibly bring out. Therefore, they keep a mighty careful check-up on their heating plant to insure a perfect and even temperature.

By virtue of this same care and attention you must also make sure that you avoid overheated and stuffy conditions in the house. Don't forget that when the crowd starts to pile in it means cutting down the heat in the proper proportion. If you pack the theatre and the heat is on full force it will be a miracle if some of the customers don't keel over.

Since the greater majority of theatres are still equipped with the usual direct heating plants, radiators, etc., they must spot some thermometers at different points in the auditorium in order to keep a watch on the temperature.

Lobbies, especially, must be kept warm because from there you generally get those annoying draughts which sweep through the rear of the house and start the patrons turning up collars and putting on their overcoats.

THEY'RE IN "THE ARMY" NOW!!!

WALTER HOHLFELD is located out in the town of Greenleaf, Kansas, where he owns and operates the Elite Theatre. He is another owner-manager to become a member of this outfit and we extend him a cordial welcome. His house is a small one but is equipped with excellent sound apparatus and up-to-date in every respect. We shall look forward to having Walter tell us what he is doing to keep his seats filled.

CHARLES S. BASSIN is the managing director of the Oriental Theatre, a Publix house in suburban Boston, Mass. He is also another new member of the Round Table and therefore in line for introduction to all other fellow showmen. So shake hands with the gang, Charles, and let's see what you can do to help keep these pages filled with interesting goings-on in show business. You do your part and we'll do ours.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

IRVIN A. MOFFETT is one of the busiest men over in the city of Gardner, Mass., and the reason for this is that he is City Manager for Publix, with supervision over the Orpheum and Uptown Theatres. This is enough to take up most of the time any one man can devote to working hours but new that he's a Round Tabler, we'll hope that an opportunity will arise which will enable him to send along some word of what is going on in show-business over his way.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

O. R. WOOD, JR., manages the Rex Theatre down in Hobbs, New Mexico, and we are glad to have a representative down in his section of the country. Next time you send the Club word, Wood, review a few of those stunts you have used to fill seats in your house and we'll pass the dope along to your brother showmen. Don't wait for that "scoop" stunt; send along whatever you have at hand.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

W. W. ACKERMAN is one more Publix man to become enrolled in this organization and he is located in the city of Altoona, Pa., where he is in charge of the Olympic Theatre. Get the Club spirit, W. W., and swap some of your show-selling yarns for those of your fellow showmen. They're all doing it these days and most every one finds it a paying investment. So come through with a stunt that we can pass along to others.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

SAMUEL FEINSTEIN is at the helm of the Shawmut Theatre in Roxbury, Mass., a suburban theatre of Boston, and while he's several hundred numbers away from Charles Bassin of the Oriental, we note that both of these new members are located on Blue Hill Avenue. Sam is also a Publix man and we're happy to record that he, too, has seen the light and become a member of the largest group of live-wire showmen in the world. We'll tell you more about this Round Tabler in future issues.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

HAROLD KAPLAN has the responsible job of directing the Minnesota Theatre, the big Publix 4,000 seater in Minneapolis, Minn., and we are indeed glad to include his name on the Club roster. It's a big task running a house of this size and we fully realize that Kaplan's time is pretty well taken up between public and Publix. However, we'll hope that he'll occasionally find time to let us know his system of operation. We presume that Cliff Gill is still with you, Kaplan, and if so, give him our best regards and tell him to give an account of himself.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

WILLIAM HARDING manages the Academy Theatre in Waukegan, Ill., and he's still another Publix man to become enrolled in this Club. Now that you're in, Bill, it is almost unnecessary to inform you that we'll expect you to let us all in on some of those effective stunts you are using to sell shows in Waukegan, for we have a hunch you are well aware of how this department keeps the ball rolling. We expect every man to do his duty, so carry on.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

MILTON BUNDT was a doorman up to about two months ago, when he made a shift from the Walker Theatre to the Stadium, the latter a house over in Brooklyn, N. Y., managed by Edward Soffer. Now he's the assistant manager and well on the way up the ladder of success. And that's not all. He's also a newly elected member of this Club and we will certainly keep an eye on this 22-year-old showman.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

WILBUR B. GRANT is in charge of booking for the Warner Theatres in Albany, N. Y., and the last time we saw this showman was when he was booker for the M-G-M exchange in New Haven, Conn. If he's as good a showman as he was booker when we knew him, then show-business has gained a valuable booster. Glad to have you with us, Wilbur, old pal, and if you don't get busy and shoot along some news from your neck of the woods, you'll hear from this end p.d.q.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

WALTER B. GARVER is another newly elected member of the Round Table Club and he is located out in St. Paul, Minn., where he manages the Strand Theatre, a link in the Publix-N. W. Circuit. In his application he states that he has followed this department for a long time and that show-tips sent in by other members have been the means of helping him over tough spots. He now proposes to do his part to keep the old ball rolling along.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

H. D. BOWERS manages the Strand Theatre in Texarkana, Texas, a 750 seat Publix house with four changes each week. Four shows to sell every week can keep any showman busy as a bee but if Bowers does get the opportunity, we hope that he will remember that all Club members are expected to communicate with headquarters just as often as possible. We're glad to welcome him as a new Round Tabler and hope he'll do his duty.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

HAROLD M. WRIGHT is at the helm of the State Theatre in Hollister, Calif., a house belonging to the Golden State Theatre circuit. His name will be familiar to many showmen out along the West Coast, and now that he's a Round Tabler you may expect to become even better acquainted with this Club member for reason that he intends to make some interesting contributions to this department.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

STERLING JERMSTAD is in charge of the Lyric Theatre out in Aberdeen, South Dakota, another link in the Publix chain of theatres. The Club welcome is also extended to this new Round Tabler and we will hope to hear how he is getting along. Jot down an account of campaigns you've made recently, Jermstad, and shoot it along to headquarters.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

J. J. McDERMOTT just never got around to enrollment in this organization until now, despite the fact that he's been a constant reader of the department ever since it started and a subscriber to this magazine for the past six years. However, it's never too late to join this ever-increasing army of showmen and sincere welcome is extended this new Round Tabler. He manages the Wollaston Theatre in Wollaston, Mass., a Publix house, and we're also going to look forward to his contributions to these pages. Shoot them along, Mac, and we'll do our part.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

CARL J. RINDCEN holds forth up in Buffalo, N. Y., where he skippers the Shea-Kensington Theatre for the Shea Operating Company on a straight picture policy. Carl, we're also mighty glad to include your name on the Club roster and hope that you will make an effort to do your share toward keeping these pages filled with information which will be of benefit to your fellow showmen. We note Chas. B. Taylor's name on your application, re subscription. He was a staunch supporter of the old M. P. News. Please give him our very best regards when you see him.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

FREDERICK M. ROSS, another new Round Tabler and an assistant manager, holds forth down in the sunny clime of Miami, Fla., where he has the job of helping sell shows at the Tower Theatre. He is sponsored for membership in this Club by Harold Kopplin and Jack Fink, both well known showmen to most of our members, and with these two behind him it certainly will not be long before Ross will be stepping out for himself. Keep in touch with your Club, Fred, so we'll know what you are doing.

MUSIC AND TALENT

STAGE SHOWS

Detroit Michigan

Week ending December 3

Brooke Johns, newly imported master of ceremonies for the Publix-Michigan theatre, got off to a great start, aided by a clever and capable bill.

Advance billing "sold" Johns as being "6 feet 4 of dynamic personality." After watching him perform, it is easy to understand why he was so popular in St. Louis (70-odd weeks), and why he may be expected to remain long in these parts.

Brooke is introduced by means of a short reel, in which he appears to jump into the camera, only to come crashing through the paper screen into the view of his audience. As an opening, Johns sings "Roll on Mississippi," and plunks his banjo.

The Danwills, six male tumblers, open the show with some excellent pyramiding which keeps the audience wondering how it is possible for an acrobat of this variety to have any ears left.

Raymond Baird, 17-year-old saxophone player, gets across 100 per cent. The lad opens with "Morning, Noon and Night," then gives his imitation of Fritz Kreisler and George Gershwin playing "At Your Command."

Freida Sullivan, a youthful and tiny mite of femininity, sings two numbers and sells herself in great style. She, too, will remain for a week or so more. Jone Penner, stage and screen comic, steals the show with his chatter and gags, as well as his two "song" offerings, the first about the rabbit, the babbling brook and the three trees (familiar to radio fans of "The Three Doctors"), and "Then Came the War."

Little Johnny Tanberger, a "discovery" of Johns, puts across "Sweet Jenny Lee." The Evans ballet of 12 girls perform three routines nicely.

San Francisco Warfield Has New Master of Ceremonies

Phil Harris, radio crooner and director of the Lofner-Harris orchestra at the Hotel St. Francis, has succeeded Ruge Wolf as master of ceremonies and musical director at the Warfield theatre, San Francisco. Besides conducting the orchestra and introducing guest stars on the stage, he croons favorite melodies in the distinctive Harris style. It is currently understood that he is pinch-hitting in this capacity, pending the arrival of Paul Ash, who is returning to his home town after an absence of several years.

NBC Names Judges in $10,000 National Orchestral Contest

The National Broadcasting Company has named five judges to select the five best manuscripts by American composers in the company's $10,000 orchestral award. Deems Taylor is director of the award plan.

The judges are Walter Damrosch, NBC musical counsel; Nicolai Sokoloff, Cleveland Symphony Orchestra; Frederick Stock, Chicago Symphony; Tullio Serafin, Metropolitan Opera, and Leopold Stokowski, Philadelphia Symphony.

FLORENCE

"Florence the Organist" rates this space this week, because, when things were a little tough in theatres, she hustled around and organized a band unit of nine men, leading them herself. The act is billed as "Florence Hofforth and Band," and is being featured in theatres and also broadcasting from important radio stations. Their most recent broadcast was over Station WOR, Newark.

Vaudeville Aids Kansas Grosses

Indications in Kansas are that vaudeville has materially aided grosses of film theatres, as houses in key spots throughout the state are adopting the policy, mostly on a three-day-a-week basis.

The Crawford in Wichita has switched to that policy to meet the competition of the Fox Miller, and presents four acts and the film at a 20-cent admission.

The Fox Jayhawk in Topeka has returned to that type of performance, after experiments indicated adoption for the season was justified. The Jayhawk will play acts routed from the RKO Mainstreet in Kansas City and the Fox Miller in Wichita.

San Francisco Union Plans Musicians Benefit Dec. 15

The united musical organizations of San Francisco, under the leadership of the Musicians' Union, have completed plans for a concert for the benefit of unemployed musicians at the Exposition Auditorium, December 15. The San Francisco Symphony Orchestra, augmented to 200, will be directed by Issay Dobrowen.

STAGE SHOWS

San Francisco Fox

Week ending December 8

Fanchon and Marco's vividly impressionistic "Slavique Idea" holds the stage at the Fox and proves a refreshing splash of color, with entertainment far above the average. In fact, every offering on the bill might easily be headlined.

The show gets into action without delay and the rise of the curtain reveals an exotic Russian setting with a dance in full swing, the colorful costumes adding to the gaiety of the scene. La Vonne Sweet charms with her solo work and Patsy Marr demonstrates that there are some new ideas in acrobatics after all. She gets a real hand when she stands on her hands on a pedestal and does a tap dance with her dainty toes on her wooden headgear.

Brock and Thompson do some unison dancing that seems a little tame, following the Russian offering, but they get into the laugh column when with dance steps they do an imitation of starting a Ford.

A lovely setting in pastel shades forms atmosphere for classical dances by the Sunkist Beauties, with the girls in billowy white. Laurel and Ted do a Pierrot and his girl friend a turn that pleases.

Sam Hearn, "That Political Feller," entertains with a rapidfire talk on subjects now on the public tongue. He combines the humor of Will Rogers with the machine gun chatter of Floyd Gibbons. Like Will be has a specialty, but instead of this being a lariat it is a violin and he catches the fancy of the audience with an imitation of a violin duet and finally a trio. He closes with the presentation of an original drama in which he takes all the parts, including the sound effects.

There is a Russian dance, marked by much throwing of the girls by husky men and by balancing work extraordinary. The setting of a Russian festival is especially effective.

The Seven Arconists bring the show to an end with a spectacular exhibition of tumbling, somersaulting and pyramiding. The five men and two girls composing the company seem tireless and go through their work with almost unbelievable speed. Springboards are used and the gymnasts are catapulted through the air, turning single, double and triple somersaults, alighting on the shoulders of others and piling up two and three high. Their act is a fitting climax to a show marked by dazzling speed.

The setting for Fanchon & Marco's "La Plaza" Idea remains constant and resembles a Spanish patio with the Wisconsin theatre orchestra, under the direction of Glenn Welty, arranged in the balcony above.

The Idea opens with the chorus of twelve dancers, six male and six female, attired in colorful Mexican costumes, stepping a lively number. The first episode is augmented by the appearance of Agustin Palafox, dancer and Estellita, tamborine twirler. Skeeter and Ray, comedy dancers, clown about in fine fettle.

Brancel offers an entertaining bit with his two dogs, Jack and Jill. He balances them in numerous precarious positions both on their front and hind legs and twists and twirls them through the air to land upon his hand on their front feet.

STAGE SHOWS

Edwardo Delagdo, master of ceremonies, sings in an entertaining fashion while Estellita dances a native step. The chorus appear in costumes reflecting the finery of Mexico to dance the rhumba. In the dancing of this episode are also Lucinda and Ricardo, tango artists.

Nelly Fernandez sings several lively tunes while the Gellis brothers, French comics, do a series of tumbling antics which receive a good share of applause. In the finale, each member of the chorus, attired in a vivid and strikingly different colored costume, dances with castanets, producing an unusual and attractive effect.

Seems that RKO is sending better acts out of New York City this season than last year. Frank Richardson, film star, headlined the Thanksgiving program and was a complete show stop with his classy songs and short talk on filmland.

Opening were Mr. Du Pont and his girl assistant with juggling and comedy. He is a clever juggler of three and five balls; also did some fancy ten-pin throwing while dancing. His imitation of a train roll with six golf balls on a snare-drum, was quite interesting.

Second was a skit, "Co-Ed Daze," with Naomi Morton and Chic Chandler with The Robbins Kids. This collegiate sketch included several dances and songs intermingled with comic chatter. Miss Morton sings "At Last I'm Happy," and next goes into a few tap steps. Chandler then does some soft shoe eccentric footwork. The Robbins Kids do some fine handsprings and somersaults.

The Arnauts came out next dressed as clowns. At this particular show one of the brothers was missing and Chandler in the second stanza substituted for him. They clowned around for a while and then played several selections on the mandolin and uke. Next they fiddled and toyed with two violins, one in full view and the other behind the curtain. In the next scene, Naomi Morton and Chick Chandler were on the set, Arnaut dressed as a bird. He did some fine imitating of bird calls.

Frank Richardson did a single act and sang several numbers from his recent motion pictures, including "Sunnyside Up," "Mona" and others. His next selections were "Saint Louis Blues" and an encore, "Ding Dong Daddy From Dumas." Then he went into "Coming Around the Mountain" and "I Found a Million Dollar Baby in a Five and Ten Cent Store."

Baltimore Hippodrome

Week ending December 4

Program started with Hatt and Herman in a comedy equilibrist act in two working on a trampoline. The girl, singing a song, is interrupted by the man pushing trampoline into her. The Four Co-Eds sing "On the Robert E. Lee," a novelty soldier boy song, "River Stay Away From My Door" and "Sweet Mystery of Life." Came then Chaney and Fox, dancers, with Earl Paull at the piano, in a mixture of tango and Spanish steps. Paull sings "I Fell In Love With You," accompanying himself with a guitar. The girl, in a burlesque blue Floradora costume, does a song and dance, followed by the man in a novelty dance. For a finish they give a novelty waltz with a medley of songs starting with "Kiss Waltz." Bell and Douglas present comedy dialogue, the girl at first playing from the audience. Next the featured act, starring Dave Apollon, with his Apollonians, eight musicians in Mexican costumes. Agnes and Adeline give a Spanish dance, then Apollon, with a Russian stringed instrument, sings "One More Chance," Danzi Goudall does a song and tap novelty, and then Apollon plays "Dance of the Hours," from La Gioconda. Pedro Gonzalos sings a Spanish song, then the "Peanut Vendor," and an encore. Agnes and Adeline do specialty toe work. Next comes Danzi Goudall in a novelty dance, followed by Nora Williams singing "Shine On Harvest Moon," encoring with Piccolo Pete" giving skillful whistle effects. Other encores: "One More Time" and "Some of These Days."

Fanchon & Marco's "Co-Ed's" Idea is one that gets a minimum of applause but does coax quite a few laughs from the throng. The Idea starts with a huge football being kicked by a huge foot, both hanging on wires. When these these are pulled up the interior of a gym is revealed, with the line in the loudest college togs imaginable. They go through the first routine with vocalization. The stage band is to the rear with colored sweaters and freshmen caps. Hubert Dyer and Barney Coyne entertain, but their act is too long. Could have been cut at least a quarter without losing anything. It's an acrobatic and tomfoolery turn that wins some laughter when one of them walks back and forth under the other on the swinging rings. The Doyle quarduplets, four of the slenderest girls in any act, come onto the stage riding their midget piano, and sing through tiny megaphones. The Robbins trio, roller skaters, put on a fast and furious act, and with a whirlwind finish—one of them holding the other man by a leg and an arm. With the girl in his arms he spins with both of them. The second routine is started with Indian clubs after which the line swings into another dance. Bussey and Case, with their mandolin, juggling, chatter, accordion and dance, are good for a few laughs, but this act could be cut also. For the last line the boys are dressed in white cadet suits, the girls in blue silk long dresses.

Roxy Shifts Stage Policy

Charles A. Caballero, new general manager of the Roxy, has instituted a change of policy in stage presentations, aiming at the offering of names of well known musical and radio stars.

Sophie Tucker Signed

The Warner Artists' Bureau has signed Sophie Tucker for the Fabian theatre, Hoboken, N. J., during the week of December 5. She will appear in a vaudeville act.

Columbo at the Waldorf

Russ Columbo, radio band leader, will direct his own band in the Empire Room of the Hotel Waldorf-Astoria. His NBC radio broadcasts will not be affected by the new engagement.

Monroe Now on KTSA

Hubert Monroe, featured at the San Antonio RKO Majestic several months ago, is now etherizing his songs over KTSA every week in the Hotel Plaza. The young crooner is accompanied at the piano by Miss Bettie Bowker, also well known in local theatricals.

ORGAN SOLOS

MERLE CLARK and ELSIE THOMPSON (Brooklyn Paramount) this week offer a community songfest entitled "Horses." The continuity for the solo is built around Merle and Elsie and their horseback riding. Besides cleverly worded lyrics (written to popular tunes) and laughable gags, a humorous effect is lent by Merle sitting on a pillow throughout the solo.

Both are dressed in riding attire and offer a pleasing appearance which makes for the perfect atmosphere of their solo. This week, Elsie sings "We'll be Back Together Again," in that intimate and appealing style of hers which has gained her a host of friends and, of course, Merle makes all the announcements and in his fine voice joins with Elsie and the audience in singing the last song.

TED MEYN (Jersey City Loew's). Entertainment and a rhythmic style of playing are still the outstanding qualities of this organist's work. It is this and a likable personality that have gained him a lot of popularity. This week he presented a snappy community sing which included the popular songs "Life is a Bowl of Cherries," "River Stay Away From My Door," "Now That You're Gone," "Together Again," "Call It Love," and a special version of "Minnie the Moocher." The "Ho De Ho's" in the chorus of the last named song were first sung by Meyn and then by the audience. The solo was peppy, well presented and thoroughly enjoyed.

"MAC" BRIDWELL (San Antonio Majestic) presented a novelty solo when he titled his recital "Radio Rackets." First Macklyn did "I'm Through With Love," followed by "Goodnight Sweetheart," a tongue twister to the tune of "I'm Yours," then a specialty on "Nevertheless." He brought his clever solo to a finis with repeating "Good Nite Sweet Heart."

BERNARD COWHAM (New York Flushing RKO) opens his "singing class" as usual, with the RKO theme song, "Voice of the RKO," and then orally "salutes" and tells them of the numbers. Most of the audience, being steady patrons, need no encouragement to sing, and when the first song goes on they are ready. Bernie had four good numbers, "I Apologize," "Faded Summer Love," "Why Dance," and a beautiful oldtimer, "Just a Memory."

The first three were played in straight community singing style, while the last was played in concert style and then sung by the audience. He also gave his weekly edition of the "North Shore Daily Journal," of the latest news of the day, written in his own inimitable parody style, to the tune "Nevertheless." If everything else in the world should fail for Bernie, his interesting and novel "news items" never will, and needless to say his solos never fail. He is one of the most popular organists in this city.

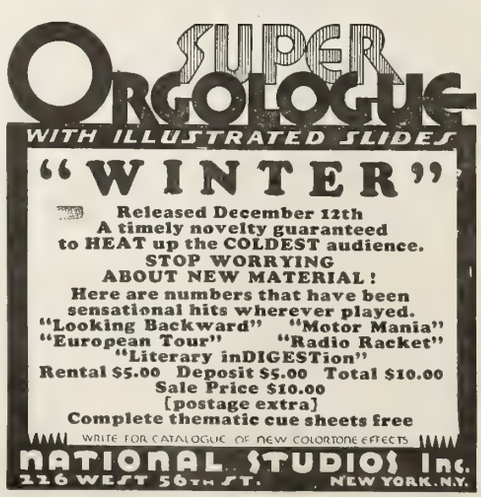
TED CRAWFORD (Santa Barbara Granada) played the usual thing for football season, melange of college songs. The organ was draped in gayly colored streamers. Pennants of the local college were hung in full view as a patriotic gesture, and two footballs were placed on the console, which heightened the effect. The console was the whole show, the organist apparently being off his stride. Crawford is known for originality in community sings, consequently a stereotyped medley of college songs is a let down.

BOB WEST (Philadelphia Fox) is gradually overcoming the reluctance of Fox audiences to join in singing, perhaps largely due to his happy choice of songs. The numbers this week included "Carolina Moon," "Little Girl," "I'm Forever Blowing Bubbles," "There's a Long, Long Trail" and "Goodnight, Sweetheart," sung by Willard Singley, baritone, who is also a great favorite.

"BROWNIE" (Charlottesville Paramount), whose real name is Art Brown, has "taken" the audience at this latest Paramount theatre. "Brownie," who has a most pleasing personality, offered a "community sing" for his opening solo and had the audience singing wholeheartedly to all the songs. He opened by singing a special song about his name and then went into the numbers for the audience to sing. A good reception was given him at the start and even more enthusiastic applause at finish. Looks like this young fellow will be there a long time.

CHAUNCEY HAINES, JR. (Los Angeles United Artists), through sheer good taste, made a very ordinary solo sound interesting. His offering was Victor Herbert's "American Fantasy." Certainly this type concert was out of season, but it was played beautifully. As one who has heard nearly every organist working this engagement, this reviewer can truthfully say Haines' work is outstanding. He has realized the true value of solo stops more than his predecessors and the general effect was that of listening to an organist striving for beauty, rather than fanfare.

VERNON GEYER (San Antonio Palace) offered as a recent organ novelty these up to date song numbers: "Guilty," "It's the Girl," "I Don't Know Why," and as a closing feature, a new one, "Nothing to Do But Love," with Geyer giving a vocal refrain through the "mike." He drew a nice hand.



AL HORNIG (Baltimore Century) introduced his novelty organlogue with words about a girl not being able to forget that night in June and Al played "Sweet and Lovely," with the words flashed. Then he sings "Good Night, Sweetheart," and follows with comic words about "So His Uncle and His Missis." He finished with playing "Of a Faded Summer Love."

OVERTURES

DAVE SMASON (San Antonio Majestic) recently presented a timely overture. First Dave offered "Sailing, Sailing"; then "Sailor's Hornpipe," "Anchors Aweigh," with Samson and Gene De Mattis on the violins and Danny Silva and two other members of the RKO-Lians on the saxophone. "Mac" Bridewell, the house organist, accompanied them on the grand organ. Next another chap in the pit gave a trombone solo with the entire orchestra coming in on "Asleep in the Deep."

SOL KLEIN (New York Academy of Music) and His Rhythm Boys presented "A Popular Medley," introducing each of the numbers orally, before the overture started. The overture opened with the introduction of "Three Musketeers," and modulated into the introduction of "Just One More Chance," and finished with a piano cadenza. Jack Ward at the organ then picks up the melody and accompanies the bass player who nicely sings through a megaphone. Last eight bars were picked up by the orchestra, who then went into a special arrangement of "Stardust," which featured a cornet solo as the orchestra softly accompanied the soloist. Solo closed with a special hot arrangement of "You Rascal," in which a number of solos were featured, each of them being well played.

This orchestra of 17 men are good musicians and are capably handled by Klein.

JOE RUSSO (New Orleans RKO Orpheum) and his RKO-lians offered "Donaldson a la Rossini" as the overture and it turned out to be another arrangement that might as well have been "William Tell" overture outright instead of the means of concealing such hits as "My Buddy," "Blue Heaven," nicely done as a trumpet duet, and "Yes Sir, That's My Baby." The orchestra played with the usual sureness that makes it the equal of any pit orchestra in town while Joe Russo conducted in the dignified manner of other days when conductors took their calisthenics in the morning upon rising instead of at each overture.

SAMUEL BENAVIE (Detroit Fisher) holds the spotlight in the third anniversary show. The pit is decorated to represent a banquet table, with Bob Nolan, M. C., acting as toastmaster. Bob extends the welcome to the audience, and introduces Benavie, who directs his orchestra through a novelty arrangement of "Bells of St. Mary." Arsene Siegel, organist, is then presented in a transcription of "Baby's Birthday Party," after which the stage bill, especially devised for the occasion, opens. A colorful setting, and tastefully done.

SOUND REPRODUCTION

The BLUEBOOK School

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 108—(A) Tell us what the Projectionist who secures the best results from disc records must do. (B) Describe the method of starting the amplifier equipment when using records. (C) Describe the method of testing records. (D) Projection speed in excess of 90 is "out". However, there is still an occasional manager who seems not to know that fact. If speed in excess of 90 is demanded, what precaution is taken in changeover?

(Note: Don't copy from the Bluebook. Try to write your answer before you look to see what the Bluebook says. Doubtless, too, you may add to what it says, and thus make available valuable additional information.)

Answer to Second Question No. 102

The record question No. 102 was: (A) Name the various elements of RCA Photophone pick-up. (B) Tell us how they are mounted. (C) How many spare exciting lamps may be mounted? (C) How many spare lamps may be brought into position for use? (D) How is electric contact provided for each lamp? (E) Will or will not RCA exciting lamp filaments always be square with the slit?

In view of the fact that changes are being constantly made in equipment and I want these answers to be up-to-date in correctness, I took the liberty of having the RCA Photophone engineering department prepare a statement, giving them merely a copy of question No. 102. This answer is published herewith:

Note: Away on a trip to Dayton, Ohio, I felt it would be impractical not to say impossible to handle the great mass of Bluebook School answers. I shall therefore assume that all those who have been sending correct answers in the past, have made good on this one and those which follow while I am away. That may be stretching matters a bit, but I believe it is justified. Many have sent in acceptable answers to all questions for months. They therefore are justly entitled to at least that small consideration.

"A. The various elements of RCA Photophone pick-ups consist of an armature with needle holder, pole faces, magnet, double dampener and case.

"B. These pick-ups are mounted to a tone arm to connect at the top of the pick-up. Electrically they are also connected to the tone arm through the use of two male prongs which fit into a female receptacle which is mounted in the tone arm.

"C. In connection with exciter lamps, there are three exciter lamps mounted in each of the 4PS-1, 4PS5A1, 4PS8A1, and 4PS6A1 soundheads. There is only one exciter lamp mounted in the 4PS14A1, 4PS16A1, 4PS16B1, 4PS14B1, 4PS20A1, 4PS20B1, 4PS21A1, 4PS21B1, 4PS22A1, and 4PS22B1 soundheads.

"In the case of the former group of soundheads, three exciter lamps are mounted on a turret which may be rotated through the use of a handle which projects through the bottom into proper position. Any one of these three lamps can be put in a proper position almost instantaneously.

"In connection with the latter group of soundheads, each exciter lamp is mounted on a special socket which allows for adjustment of the lamps and slides into two connectors mounted in the soundhead. These sockets can very easily be pulled out and a spare lamp and socket inserted when required.

"D. Where exciter lamps are mounted in turrets, the turret itself is used for one side of the line and is grounded. The other side of the line consists of a spring which is brought into contact with the lamp base by the thumb screw which is used to tighten the lamp in the socket.

"In connection with the latter group of soundheads, electric contact is provided through two prongs mounted in the soundhead over which the socket slides for mounting.

"E. The exciter lamp filaments are not always square with the slit. With the RCA Photophone optical system, the light from the filament is condensed to a round image on the slit and it is only necessary that the diameter of this image be larger than the length of the slit. Actually, the image of the slit is focused on the surface of the film and the image of the filament is somewhere between the film and the photocells. For this reason it can be seen that it is not necessary to have the filament square with the slit."

CONTINUING THE PROJECTION TOUR

At Marion, Ohio

Friend Daughter and I both felt that we just could not pass near Marion, Ohio, without visiting with our good friends, R. S. Slagle and H. J. Seckle and their charming wives. Messrs. Seckle and Slagle are projectionists at the Public Palace theatre, Marion, and in them Director of Projection Harry Rubin has two livewire, wireawake, progressive motion picture-sound, projectionists. And mark you well, I am not saying that just because they are my friends. I'll back those two to make good on any projection job anywhere.

I dropped in at the Palace, of which theatre I have told you before, and had a pleasant chat with Manager Wheeler, who previously presided over the destinies of a Publix theatre in South Bend, Ind. Mr. Wheeler impresses one well. He is, I am sure, a very competent manager. I am advised by Projectionists Slagle and Seckle that they receive his cooperation in all things projectional, which is one proof that he knows his business as a manager.

We had a most pleasant visit at the homes of both Seckle and Slagle, whose better five-tenths are not only charming hostesses, but also pastmasters in the art de culinary. Mrs. Slagle surprised us with a new sort of dessert. It was a "pie," the filling of which was frozen pumpkin and the crust ice cream. The imitation was so excellent that I remarked: "Well, I'll be da—". Oh, well, never mind that. This is a polite party.

We had breakfast at the Seckle wigwam, and she got even by treating us to wild pheasant, which, believe you me, is some considerable dish. Honors are even as between the two domiciles. If either of those chaps gets a divorce I'm going to move to Marion at once and start another kind of suit.

National Cash Register and Motion Pictures

Down in the city of Dayton, Ohio, 'way back in about 1884, Mr. John H. Patterson conceived the idea that cash registers were needed. With a very small factory he started manufacturing these very useful devices. That plant has been afflicted with growing pains, until it now occupies 23 buildings having a total of 55 acres of floor space. Even in these times it is employing something like 6,000 men—about half its normal force.

In 1896 Mr. Patterson decided he could best teach his mechanics improved methods of doing things by means of projected stereopticon pictures. He therefore in that year installed a photographic department, the duty of which was to produce stereopticon slides to be used in the illustration of lectures to his workmen. In the year 1902 a complete motion picture outfit was purchased from the Edison Company and added to the projection equipment of the factory, motion pictures being produced for the purpose of instructing his salesmen in the various things which would add to their selling abilities, and for the showing of improved mechanical processes of manufacture to his workmen.

While in Europe in 1911, Mr. Patterson saw an exhibition of Kinemacolor film. So much did these films impress Mr. Patterson that he paid the expenses of the inventor for a trip to this country, where, at the factory of National Cash Register Company, he produced natural color films used to illustrate landscape gardening and home beautification in which subjects Mr. Patterson was greatly interested.

In 1897 Mr. Patterson started a series of weekly meetings for children. These meetings consisted of illustrated lectures. They were held in the auditorium of the factory. They have been held ever since, at least during the winter months. The average attendance reaches well up to 3,000 a week. At noon each day a show is given for the benefit of the factory workers. These shows include regular productions, run serially so as not to overrun the noon hour, plus scenic and comedies. These shows are a really remarkable institution. Many hundreds of the employees eat their lunch in the auditorium while enjoying a scenic or a comedy. At the entrance of the auditorium the employees may purchase a bottle of hot coffee or a bottle of milk for five cents. Then they seat themselves to look at a good picture and satisfy the inner lad while doing so.

Other thousands eat at the regular dining room of the factory and get over in time to enjoy the rise of the serially run productions. It is a thoroughly pleasing idea, reflecting much credit on the officials of the company. It costs quite a lot to do a thing like that, too, because not only is there the cost of projection (O. V. Ingram is just now the projectionist), the heating and lighting, and there is the debris to be cleaned up after 400 or 500 have eaten their lunches.

The projection department of the National Cash Register Company is and always has been under the direction of Mr. Otto Nelson, who has been with Mr. Patterson since the year 1804. The department has grown to rather astonishing dimensions.

The main auditorium seats about 1,200. It has a complete stage, capable of accommodating the largest productions. In its projection room are three Simplex projectors, equipped with high intensity arcs, one double effect stereopticon, two stereopticons and four spot and flood lamps. In the factory are four other projection rooms, equipped equally well, though not so elaborate. The company maintains an educational film service for the promotion of visual education. It rents films out on a regular commercial basis to those able to pay for them. Also it lends films to schools, churches, etc., who lack money with which to pay for them.

The department has in stock more than 100,000 stereopticon slides and more than 1,000,000 feet of positive and half a million feet of negative film.

The Dayton Theatres

And now as to the Dayton theatres. There are five first-run houses. RKO operates three of them, Loew one, and the fifth is independent.

To get the facts on matters theatrical I very naturally went to RKO, since it owns a majority of the large theatres. What followed was really a bit amusing.

In RKO all wisdom is presumed to reside and have its very being in headquarters. I found that theatre managers and other employees were afraid to answer even the most simple question. Not having caught the name of one manager, I asked for it. He did not reply, though whether his silence was a part of an "answer no question" policy I don't know.

One RKO manager refused to say how many RKO theatres there were in Dayton, his reason being that one manager had been discharged just a few days before for having answered some question which he said was equally simple and harmless.

I then visited the office of the city manager, who, while friendly and courteous, I found was equally taciturn. He, too, said he was not permitted to answer any questions of any sort.

Now, gentlemen, such a course seems to me to be both very wrong, foolish and mistaken. I could have obtained all the information wanted without any assistance from the managers or the city manager. Such a course does not and cannot serve to bottle up information to any appreciable extent. It merely stirs resentment.

I visited the RKO Colonial theatre, in the heart of the downtown section, where I found the picture to be excellent and the sound to be out of the ordinary in excellence.

At Loew's theatre I had a most pleasant chat with Mr. M. C. Burnett, manager. Also I stepped up to the projection room and had a talk with A. Kennedy and the other projectionist whose name I made note of and am now unable to read my own note. It looks like T. Suman.

I asked Manager Burnett about business. His reply was: "Business has remained about the same, which means that it really is better, because of the general conditions prevailing."

Manager Burnett also paid Lester Isaac, director of projection for Publix, New York City, a very sincere compliment. Said he: "We get very excellent co-operation in projection matters from Mr. Isaac. He is the right man in the right place."

This Loew's theatre seats 2,500. It plays straight pictures. Its prices are 15 cents in the afternoon and 35 cents in the evening. I visited the projection room, which is in the front of the balcony and about level with the screen center. I was surprised with the excellence of results, considering that the distance of projection is somewhere in the neighborhood of 50 feet. Isaac, however, provided the theatre with some very highly corrected lenses, which take care of the condition very well, indeed.

From Loew's theatre I crossed the street to the Victory theatre, managed by Mr. J. Redelle, with whom a short conversation was held.

Very evidently Manager Redelle does not believe the industry would have much success did it attempt a return to silent pictures.

TO THEATRE OWNERS

Is your house in the red? If so, why not let a 100 per cent MANAGER and SHOWMAN put it in the black. Do not continue to lose money. No salary asked until ability is proven. Unquestionable references. Location immaterial. For further particulars, write at once to Box 90, Motion Picture Herald

1790 Broadway, New York, N. Y.

Parkersburg, W. Va.

Down on the Ohio river in the very much up, down and around state of West Virginia (I refer to its tableography), lies the city of Parkersburg. It has about 22,000 population and possesses one Publix, two Warner and three independent theatres.

Local No. 100, IATSE and MPMO, mixed local, had invited us to stop, partake of their hospitality and talk to them on matters pertaining to projection. The first 65 miles out of Dayton were negotiated in a sea of slush. There had been snow the night before and the poor old "Princess" got something like three and a half hundred baths in just plain slop. The language I used at times is nobody's business. Friend Daughter had to stop her ears with chewing gum after the first outburst.

Anyway, Parkersburg is a very pretty city and the boys there are livewires. Ninety-five per cent of the population of Parkersburg are American born, I am told. That's good! I believe fully 2 per cent of the population of New York City is the same. Anyhow, be that as it may, the men of Local 100 are not the kind who sit down and repine when misfortune comes. I offered to stop in their city, and although the bank in which their money was deposited had gone "blooey," they accepted my offer promptly and made good with excellent hotel accommodations and so on. Men who will do things like that after having just received such a swat are, I repeat, livewires.

The meeting was, of course, small, but the interest was keen. When the talk was finished a nice lunch was served on the stage, the goodies being for the most part, as I understand it, prepared by the wives of the members.

Local 100 now has but two stage hands, both fine men, who told me rather sadly that there was only enough stage business nowadays to buy an occasional ham sandwich.

Mr. F. H. Mullenox is the president of local 100, E. A. Earley is secretary, both financial and recording. T. C. Ward is business manager and Chas. Miller is the boy who totes the funds around—when there are any. Incidentally, the closed banks are believed to be solvent, so the local will get its funds back by and by.

While at Parkersburg we visited two theatres, the Hiehle and the Lincoln. We called at two others, but they were closed for the supper hour.

At the Lincoln theatre I found Mr. George Cocheran, the manager, out to dinner. The Lincoln seats 847 and its projection conditions are fine, although the room is small. They have Powers projectors equipped with Powerlite. They are using something I have not seen in quite some time; namely, a stereopticon attached to the projector. The sound is Western Electric.

The secretary of the local, Mr. E. A. Earley, welcomed us to the projection room, where he was on duty. Mr. Henry Hiehle, the other projectionist, came in while we were there. The boys were putting on a good show though a little more light could be used to advantage on the screen.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut toward such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features which are finished or are in work, but to which release dates have not been assigned, are listed in "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the distributors. Where they vary, the change is probably due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1931, unless otherwise specified.

VOICE OF THE INDUSTRY

The Pass System

THE BIG TROUBLE WITH THE PICture industry today is that there are too many cheap managers operating theatres. Unlike other merchandising business, they cannot operate their theatres without giving their business to the public free. Why should a theatre business be so different from other merchandising business?

Some managers I know keep the town flooded with passes through so many methods that it is absolutely disgraceful to the industry, and for no other purpose than to make a showing with the public, which cheapens the product and causes the legitimate exhibitor much concern in delivering the best to the public at a fair admission price.

If the exhibitor has to give two-thirds of his business gratis in order that he might exist, he had better get out for the good of the business.

The public has got the notion that there is no expense to operating a theatre, because of the methods pursued by so many managers in conducting their theatres, and rightful they are in so believing. The theatre has become a last thought when seeking amusement; in fact, the industry thereby is fast losing its dignity. The value of the industry is rapidly losing its place on account of these ingrates in the business.

So many managers have abused the pass system that the public has come to think that it is useless to waste their money for theatre amusements when they can get free passes with so little effort.

Some managers have cheapened the value of theatre admissions through the free system, as, by placing no limit of time to their advertising passes, they cause thousands to accumulate during the year, only to rush the theatres when better productions are shown.

Free passes to all the school teachers, at this time one class of salary with absolute safety and that is able to contribute to the prosperity through the spending of same—free passes to all the hotels, telephone girls, birthday passes to every one from 3 years up to 100 years of age, class passes once each month for the schools, monthly wedding passes, and, on top of it all, placing from 500 to 1,000 free admissions on circulars put out on each picture.

If there is any method of distributing passes that you managers have failed to think of, you might keep in mind some of the above to help complete your list because the public has begun to expect it and at the expense of the industry.

What other merchandising business gives away three-fourths of its business in order that it might make a petty showing with its competition? Do you have the guts to go into a grocery store and ask the manager to give you a sack of flour or even a loaf of bread? I say you do not; it is beneath your dignity. Can you say that for the picture industry? I say you can't, and who is the cause of it? No one but ourselves.

It is safe to say that no day passes but some bird approaches you with a request for a pass or several passes, and why? You have given until they expect it, and now when they go to the show they either have a pass or they must see something extraordinary, and the industry is suffering more and more every day. There are entirely too many managers that crave publicity with too costly a method, either too selfish, ignorant, or with an air of "To hell with the industry." They really are not managers, but vultures.

A merchant doesn't consider a salesman a good salesman that has to give his product away. Any one can do that, but it does take a good salesman to sell his product at a fair profit. And why should the salesman of the picture industry be the goat? Let's uphold this wonderful business.—W. J. WILKE, Proprietor, Liberty Theatre, Graham Texas.

Pathegrams Marketing a New 9.5mm. Projector-Radio Set

MOTION PICTURE HERALD

Vol. 105, No. 12 — December 19, 1931

NEWSREEL STATUS

THE ruthless and apparently entirely illegal, or extra-legal treatment of Mr. John L. Herrmann of Paramount Sound News and his remarkable sound picture record of the Leavenworth Federal Prison outbreak, by the prison authorities and staff, as reported by Motion Picture Herald's correspondent in Kansas City, Mr. Al Finestone, sharply points the importance of further efforts to establish the status of the news screen as a part of the press.

The administration of the Leavenworth Federal Prison has been for some thirty years conspicuous for its high-handed and indiscreet attitude in public relations. It has had three dynasties of local rule without a change from the policy which has contributed no little to ill-will among newspapermen for that phase of the Department of Justice's operations. But never in the history of its several investigations has the prison official staff dared such treatment of the press as that which is now said to have been given this newsreel and its representative.

Newspapers fight back. They defend reporters in the right. They have long memories. Newsreels do not. There are some complications and reasons why they can not be quite as aggressive or assertive as newspapers. Chief among these reasons is the fact that while the newsreel is a form of publication, the producer of a newsreel is not its publisher. The publisher of the newsreel is the exhibitor who shows it on his screen. He is subject to local influences and pressures to a much greater degree, usually, than the editor of the local paper. The newspaper has the accumulated tradition of the alleged "freedom of the press." The newsreel, which is probably for many millions quite as much a vehicle of the news as the printed page is in the eyes of the law and the tradition of the courts, merely a part of the amusement business.

News reels have been issued in the United States since 1910. They have not in the subsequent twenty years ever shown any teeth. They have never taken a good, first class editorial wallop at anybody or anything. It would create a wholesome respect for the newsreel and the whole of the motion picture if they would, now and then, just for the morale. Opportunities are many and every year thousands of feet of negative are killed under official and political pressures.

But progressively down the years, as any experienced newsreel camera man will admit, the status of the newsreel in relations with public officials, with the police and authorities high and low, has been declining. Today newsreels get courtesy only from those who seek the favorable limelight of the films.

If not for their own sake, then for the motion picture, the newsreel might well develop a backbone.

In contrast with the Leavenworth prison's display of unhappy official ill-breeding, one may cite the interesting incidental of the great Ohio prison disaster at Columbus of something more than a year ago when Pathe News sound camions and cameramen were admitted to the prison yard and aided in their work while the fire still was raging. The resulting screen story, also a great scoop at the time, certainly did not impair the status of the prison administration.

NEW CUSTOMERS

IN a clarion voiced advertisement in "The New York Times," Photoplay Magazine makes some significant observations concerning the motion picture audience. In this advertisement, true enough, Mr. James R. Quirk, the publisher, is seeking to arrest the attention of advertisers of nationally distributed merchandise for his medium. But there is incidentally in his words a message and a story, too, for the makers and merchandisers of motion pictures. He says:

Movie audiences are romantic. They seek release from the humdrum drudgery of everyday existence. They welcome the emotional stimulation of pictures that lifts them out of themselves.

They live, in short, in "make believe" worlds—sharing the loves and hates, joys and sorrows of their favorite stars—wanting intensely to wear the same clothes, to have the same things in their homes, to revel in all their luxuries of life. . . . Every year new customers march into the market—2,000,000 strong! Since 1929, more than four million new customers have come of age.

Since 1929 there have also been more than two and a half million weddings—and every wedding starts a new and endless cycle of wants, for furniture, for foods, for electric refrigerators, for radios, for automobiles, and for baby carriages.

This is the "youth" of America. Its slate is clean. It has no fear of the future—cares little for the past—has never tasted defeat.

Last year two million, next year two million—in the next ten years twenty million young men and women will come of age—and want as much as any twenty million bought in the last decade! And they will get it because, like the youth of any generation, they want it more than money in the bank!

That "youth of America"—"2,000,000 strong"—must be kept sold on the motion picture as the nation's greatest entertainment, as the world's greatest value per dollar expended for entertainment. The audience of the motion picture is this eternally renewed public, coming in by birth and fading out in age and death. The motion picture's selling job, its obligation to capture and educate its public, is as endless as the life stream itself.

And, incidentally, one reflects that the motion picture in possession of the world's great medium of publicity, the screen, never directly says anything on the screen for the screen.

WE WRITE A LETTER TO "THE TIMES"

THE NEW YORK TIMES in its issue of December 10 editorialized with great vigor concerning the motion picture as not quite an art, and with little hope that it might ever attain that status, adding of course the standard comment on Hollywood extravagance. The Times editorial, under a heading of "But is it Art?" follows:

BUT IS IT ART ?

Dr. Martin Arrowsmith in the film version is so much to the liking of his creator that Mr. Lewis is inclined to believe the movies may actually be beginning to grow up. If that is so, they have been a long time at it. In the face of President Hoover's exhortation to fortitude in hard times one cannot help remembering how often the screen has been on the point of blossoming into art and never getting very far. At one time the Germans were expected to create a movie art, but they exhausted themselves as photographing demoniac scientists from impossible angles. The Soviet Russians took over the trick camera and improved on it, but in their turn succumbed to an atrophy of imagination. Moscow's movie directors can think only of proletarian multitudes marching up monumental staircases in vindication of Karl Marx's views on Surplus Value. So tears continue to be shed over the failure of the pictures to grow up, to become adult, to pass from a business into an art. But it has by no means been determined that such possibilities exist in a medium destined by its very nature for vast audiences. After all, there are other mass recreations of which we never think in terms of culture; there are football and baseball games, circuses and bullfights and the ancient games of the arena.

Still, the verdict may be in favor of the film as potential art. It is then obvious what the first step must be. The cost of producing motion pictures must be drastically reduced. The purpose would be just the opposite of that underlying lower production costs in industry. The manufacturer slices his costs in order to increase sales. The movie producer who would create art must slash his costs in order to be in a position to reduce sales, in order to make a fair profit by appealing to a comparatively restricted public with a correspondingly higher level of taste. Hollywood's crazy extravagance has become a byword; but even at its soberest, the movie maker's standard of living will stand sharp curtailment. In the legitimate theatre the difference obtains between $50,000 spent on a musical comedy and one-fifth the amount, possibly one-tenth the amount, that is enough to launch a real play. By learning to work with one-fifth as many directors, scenarists, leading players, mobs, palaces, elephants, and what not, a film producer might be able to make a living by addressing himself to a fairly limited, adult, intelligent audience.

"No Hollywood director of ordinary merit is, in relation to his responsibilities, any more a spendthrift of men and money and costly ability than a really good, go-getting city editor. . . . Now a little high-powered efficiency could readily ruin a good newspaper. Every once in a while it does. . . . Spendthrifting in creative work sometimes pays out. The spectacular performance in any field is unlikely to be associated with what business experts would call sanity and good judgment. . . ."

WHILE it is futile to endeavor to rise to answer to all such outgivings of the public press, the editor of MOTION PICTURE HERALD, faithful reader of The New York Times that he is, was bestirred to take his pen in hand to offer defense of the screen and to make certain perhaps pertinent remarks about the press in general and The Times in particualr. He wrote as follows:

TO THE EDITOR
THE NEW YORK TIMES:

The editorial on the motion picture, inspired by "Arrowsmith," appearing in the Times of December 10 under the heading "But Is It Art?", unlike most newspaper discussions of the screen, contains so much that is undeniably sound and correct that it is worth while to differ with it.

First, let me wonder wherein the editorial writer is justified in his obvious assumption that it is necessarily true that what pleases many is just a business and that which pleases only a few is art. If the motion picture is not art the trouble is with the human race. It is regrettable that the millions do not appreciate or support some of the more intelligent plays, novels and motion picture. It is also to be observed right in our town that these millions tend to prefer a flambuoyant, erotic journalism, numerically, even above the admitted excellence and preeminence of the Times. That also is the fault of the race, not of the art, science, business or industry of journalism. People just will be like that. Perhaps they should be abolished.

But your editorial writer is most impatient and unkind when he, with reference to Mr. Sinclair Lewis' assertion that the movies are growing up, says, "If so, they have been a long time at it." A long time, indeed! The first film flicked on a screen at West Orange some time in late 1889 or early 1890. The screen became a commercial fact with a Broadway opening thirty-six years ago next April. Now even the highly intelligent institution of journalism, which is quite as much an assimilator and borrower from kindred arts as the motion picture, was no great shakes 36 years after Gutenberg, and only in the last half century has the daily purveying of news achieved really important status among the arts, or shall we say industries, of expression. It is useless to ask for patience in these trying, hurrying days, but there is promise that the motion picture will really amount to something in the next three or four centuries, when it has accumulated lore and experience through some such period as the press has had for development. Until then judgment on the abilities of the medium will be premature.

The editorial doubtings about the screen as "a medium destined by its very nature for vast audiences" and your comparisons with "other mass reactions of which we never think in terms of culture . . . football and baseball games, circuses and bullfights . . ." are not founded on clear analysis. All that is as far in error as it would be to doubt the cultural value of the Times merely because it does devote many columns to just such mass sports and entertainments. I do not, for instance, let the clutter of those mass pages get between me and your able dramatic page, your interesting Sunday magazine and invaluable book review section. I do not share with the masses, even the super-selected masses of the Times' big quality circulation, a taste for reports on murder, rum running, sports or society, but their popular success is not in my eyes an indictment of the printing press or the newspaper.

Now as one quite as familiar with production methods in journalism as in the motion picture, I will venture to observe that what your editorial brands as "Hollywood's crazy extravagance" is probably only an inevitable phenomenon of creative endeavor, and that its parallels are to be found abundantly elsewhere, even in newspaper offices, for instance. To be sure, these parallels are neither so large, individually, on the dollar scale, nor so conspicuous, because newspaper offices are almost never reported upon by reporters, certainly not in the same terms as a Hollywood studio. Many and perhaps most good newspapers prepare and purchase, often by costly cable and radio, from two to three times as much material as they elect to print. The public would be amazed at the difference between the content of the newspaper and the content of the wastebasket, the "killed" matter and the "overset." Hundreds of telephone calls and messages are broadcast and endless hours of manpower time from expensive staffs of highly trained men are expended, habitually and uncomplainingly by city editors and news editors to get a relatively few but important news accounts.

No Hollywood director of ordinary merit is, in relation to his responsibilities and resources, any more a spendthrift of

ECONOMICS AND PARTY POLITICS STAND IN THE WAY OF TAX PLAN

Democrats Voice Disapproval Of "Nuisance" Taxes, Including Levy on Theatre Admissions; New Policy Adopted

Politics will go hand-in-hand with economics in dealing with the recommendations made last week by President Herbert Hoover and Andrew J. Mellon, secretary of the treasury, for a tax of ten per cent on admissions over ten cents and for levies on numerous other industries, revenue from which, combined with heavy income and corporation taxes, are proposed to meet the present Government deficit.

On general party principles, the Democrats already have offered considerable opposition to the Hoover-Mellon tax plan.

When the Democrats in Congress make known their policies with regard to taxation, it is expected they will practically ignore the "nuisance" features and concentrate on large incomes and on estate taxes.

Plan Faces Opposition

Relentless opposition by the Democrats and by many prominent Administration Republicans and "progressive" Republicans faced the Hoover plan this week, and although the Democrats announced they would prepare a schedule of their own, they have reached no definite agreement since Secretary Mellon appeared with the recommendations last Wednesday. However, party leaders began organizing various committees and affairs on Capitol Hill and a new Policies Committee held its first meeting on Tuesday, at which general legislative problems were discussed. The tax situation was touched upon only lightly. A "go slowly" policy has been adopted by the Democrats, whose leaders point out that there is no hurry in view of the fact that tax legislation will not be presented for another month, or possibly longer.

A sizable number of Democratic congressmen this week went on record as vigorously opposing the lowering of admission price exemption from $3 to ten cents. It was freely admitted about Capitol Hill that the new Democratic proposals will highlight heavy levies on large incomes of the wealthy. This belief is likewise held in industry circles where legislation battles are planned.

Theatres Can't Absorb Tax

That the theatre industry will receive more favorable consideration from the Democrats than it has been given by Secretary Mellon is indicated already by the views of those approached at Washington. Opinion is governed largely by the type of district which the individual member of Congress represents. In general, however, there is a strong feeling that lower admissions should not be taxed, and this because of the fact that it costs the Government more money to keep books on taxes collected on tickets between 10 and 25 cents than is actually netted by the tax. Secondly, reduced wages and part-time employment have brought the average worker's income to the point where for many there is little available for amusement, and that limited amusement, it is felt, should not be further reduced by taxation.

It is an accepted fact, certainly within the industry, that theatres cannot absorb the tax, what with theatre business at a low ebb and intakes reduced to the point where the average theatre, of all classes, nets no more than one to five per cent annually. If and when the industry is called upon to defend itself at Washington against the proposed taxation, its spokesman may point out that the government deficit should be made up from surtaxes on incomes of individuals of the upper classes, and they may also recommend a budget slash.

The general belief at Washington is that the reduction of exemption which is now figured below $3, should not be lowered to ten-cent tickets. The same is held to be true with respect to other "nuisance" taxes proposed, but on the question of surtaxes many Democrats take a radically different view. The bulk of complaint on Capitol Hill is that 40 per cent is not high enough on incomes of the wealthy.

Will Write Own Bills

The Democrats, now controlling the House in a Republican regime, find it is up to them to write their own bills. Accordingly, the Democrats are about to embark on the framing of a bill to increase the Government revenues, whether it be by further loans, a bond issue or taxes. Administration Republicans will fight the bill and seek adoption of the Administration program.

Meanwhile the various industries which find themselves affected by the proposed taxes are gathering their forces for an assault upon the Capitol when the ways and means committee, now headed by a Democrat, announces its hearings. Within a few days the type of taxation to be sponsored by the Democrats will be announced but the actual rates in the bill will depend largely upon the information developed in the hearings.

Tentative Plans

The motion picture industry will join forces with the oil and tobacco industries and with communication and the interests in the wholesale battle to be centered on Capitol Hill—if and when it is necessary to defend itself against the tax legislation as proposed, leaders in the picture field have commenced to muster forces for the campaign and, it is understood, much ammunition already has been accumulated. Tentative plans for the defense already have been outlined by Charles C. Pettijohn and have been concentrated on the following points:

1—The motion picture industry is today carrying every penny of tax burden that it can carry, and still function on anything like a quality basis. Thoughtless proposals seeking new sources of revenue have here and there classified the motion picture as a luxury. This is not correct. Motion pictures are not a luxury. They are a necessity. They should be neither crippled nor destroyed. To further tax the motion picture industry is more like placing a tax on education than a tax on a luxury.

2—During the late war, theatres were permitted to consume coal and use electric light and power because they were classified as necessities and essentials. Take every form of cheap, innocent, and wholesome amusement away from the American people, and this country will see "RED" in 48 hours.

3—A luxury is something that the ordinary person cannot afford to buy or own. A five carat diamond ring, and a string of pearls are luxuries. So is a $2,500 fur coat. But the favorite inexpensive and wholesome form of entertainment and recreation of the American people is certainly not, and never can be classified as a luxury.

4—There is quite a distinction between luxury taxes and nuisance taxes. Taxing the poor man's amusement is the equivalent of "taxing the poor to eliminate the bread lines."

5—Since January 1, 1929, city ordinances proposing to tax theatre admissions 3, 5 and 10 per cent have been proposed in 14 cities in the United States and in 23 states. In each and every instance, after due consideration, these proposals to tax theatre admissions were discarded and rejected for various and many good reasons:—

A—In several instances, where this form of taxation has been proposed they have discovered that the cost of collection, of these small amounts in innumerable instances, is an expensive as well as an impractical method of taxation. Any tax that costs more than ten percent of the money received to collect it, is not considered to be a good form of taxation, and a theatre admission tax would cost much more than that amount in bookkeeping, salaries, reports, checking, etc.

B—Such taxes are often referred to as "penny taxes." They amount to one penny, two pennies, three pennies, four pennies, etc., to be paid by the already burdened tax payers at the box office of the theatres. If any citizen averages going to a picture show once a week, he will pay these penny taxes 52 times a year. How cheerful and encouraging these "52 reminders" must be to the millions of citizens and tax payers who attend motion picture theatres! Does any one presume that these millions of people will be encouraged "to rise above the fog of our present business depression," by being compelled to pay these nuisance taxes at theatres 35 million times a year. The psychology of that form of tax is devastating.

C—There are always those who will say "let the theatre assume the tax," and pay 5 percent, or 10 percent of their gross revenue so that we can keep all of our boards and commissions running and all of the "faithful" on the government and state payrolls. If anybody thinks that the theatres in this country can pay 10 percent of their gross, or 5 percent of their gross receipts in addition to the taxes they are

Theatres Cannot Absorb Assessment; Ammunition Being Massed for an Assault on Capitol Hill at Washington

AUTHOR FIGHTING CHANGE IN COPY IS A FOOL, DECLARES WILL IRWIN

Says It Would Have Been More Sensible Had Dreiser "Taken His Money and Been Satisfied"; Denies Films Malign

"Any author writing for the movies who thinks not a word or a thought in his copy can be changed is a fool."

This emphatically delivered opinion was rendered by Will Irwin, author and journalist, in discussing motion picture story material at his Greenwich Village home in New York. While reluctant to comment on the contrasting reactions of Theodore Dreiser and Sinclair Lewis to the pictures made from a famous novel of each of theirs, Irwin made it clear that he had little sympathy for the writer who turns "prima donna" when a portion of his story is altered for motion picture purposes. Dreiser was so upset by Paramount's version of his novel, "An American Tragedy," that he resorted to the courts in an ineffectual effort to prohibit exhibition of the picture. Lewis, on the other hand, was so pleased with what United Artists did pictorially with his novel, "Arrowsmith," that he took two hours to communicate his delight to a group of reporters gathered in his New York home last week.

Questions Dreiser's Complaint

"I am glad to hear that Lewis thinks 'Arrowsmith' is a good picture," said Irwin. "I must see it soon. Although my connections with the Authors' League make it unwise for me to criticize Dreiser's attitude toward the motion picture of "An American Tragedy," I do think it would have been much more sensible had he taken his money for the story and been satisfied.

"Why," exclaimed Irwin, "I understand he didn't put in an appearance at the studio until the picture had been completed. Then he wanted it almost entirely remade. His contract with the producer permitted him to be at the studio and offer suggestions while the picture was in production."

Refused to Sit in Judgment

Irwin disclosed that Adolph Zukor had invited him to sit on an informal judging board to determine the merits of Dreiser's complaint, but that due to the position he holds in the Authors' League he did not feel at liberty to sit in judgment on the complaint of a fellow member. Irwin is chairman of the Copyright Committee of the League.

Mr. Irwin wrote for Mr. Zukor the biographical work entitled "The House That Shadows Built."

"Much as I should have enjoyed the opportunity my good friend Adolph Zukor afforded me to 'sit on' Dreiser, I did not feel that I could take advantage of it," he said. "Personally, I thought 'An American Tragedy' was pretty fair picture entertainment. What were Dreiser's objections to it, anyhow? Didn't he complain that the picture failed to make 'Society' the villain? Well, that's absurd, it seems to me. It would be quite impossible to convey that in pictures, to really succeed in getting that point across to an average movie audience without making the picture ridiculous."

Irwin disagrees with picture critics who contend that the newspaper profession and its members are being maligned by recent pictures having to do with newspaper life. For almost 25 years Irwin was associated with newspapers from Coast to Coast as reporter, editor, special writer and foreign correspondent.

"Never Malicious," He Says

"The pictures of newspaper life which I have seen have been largely exaggerated, but never malicious," said Irwin. "Neither has any of them impressed me as being unfair to newspapermen. Oversensitive journalists, or those with guilty consciences, may find it easy to complain over the exaggerations, but I think those exaggerations are legitimate—demanded by dramatic representation.

"'Front Page' was certainly an exaggeration, but it was vastly entertaining, and that is sufficient excuse. Virtually all drama is exaggerated. 'Journey's End' is the only picture I have seen which I would term an exception. It was stark realism, and because war is natural drama it did not have to be exaggerated."

Irwin was war correspondent for the Saturday Evening Post from 1914 to 1916.

MPTO to Act on Vincent Proposal For Get-Together

Proposal for a get-together of industry leaders to discuss trade ills and their correction, which was advanced by Walter Vincent, chairman of the exhibitors' national Continuing Committee, has been placed before the MPTO of Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey and Delaware for approval and action. It was this eastern exhibitors' association which sponsored the MGM National Protest meeting, of which the Continuing Committee is an outgrowth.

Vincent said that action on the suggestion for a general meet should rest with the exhibitors' association which authored the original meeting, although Vincent had planned at first to invite President Will H. Hays of the MPPDA to sponsor the industry get-together.

Cowan Obtains Approval on New Standard Frame

(F. H. Richardson's Comment on Page 71)

Exhibitors' agreement to accept specifications for a new standard projector aperture was obtained in New York this week by Lester Cowan, executive secretary of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences. The specifications agreed upon for the new projector frame are .600 x .825, representing a slight change in the frame originally proposed by the Academy, the specifications for which were .615 x .820.

Participating in the theatre conferences at which the standard projector specifications were agreed upon, were representatives of Fox, Paramount-Publix, Loew's, RKO, Warners, Universal, Erpi, RCA Photophone, and the Projection Advisory Council.

Bernhard in Charge Of Warner Circuit

H. M. Warner, president Warner Bros. Pictures, announced on Wednesday the appointment of Joseph Bernhard to the general managership of Warner Bros. Theatres and its subsidiary the Stanley Company, succeeding Dan Michalove.

Michalove continues in an executive capacity assisting the company in all its forms of operation where his experience and services are now required. Bernhard has been closely identified with the major operations of Warner Brothers. His appointment as general manager is effective immediately.

TINKER OF FOX AND WHO AND WHY

A Portrayal of a New Chief Coming Into Screenland Out of the World of Wall Street

By TERRY RAMSAYE

A new name, strange to the lips of movieland, has come into the high roster of the capital of screenland—Edward Richmond Tinker, president of Fox Film Corporation.

Several new names have come along on the same general tide of development—Clarke, Lasker, Hertz, Wrigley—there are others, probably many others, yet to come.

It all means that the pioneer era of the screen has run its course and that the industry of the motion picture is now in the more rapid later stages of relating itself to, and being assimilated by, the great structure that we call "American business." Real contact between the motion picture and the vast complex machine of finance has finally been established. It has happened with some abruptness, as is so often true of our violent, intemperate industry. The happening, which might in other circumstances have been a more gradual process, has the flavor of climax by force of two pressures, the internal condition of stresses resultant from the sound-and-talk revolution in the art, and the external condition of distresses, commonly called "the depression," and which are more accurately the bitter symptoms of the economic "morning after" of civilization's night of madness in the World War.

It is all natural, inevitable, and was written into the pattern from the day when motion picture enterprises began to be bigger than one-man businesses.

This development which is personified in the array of new names, those arrived and yet to come, is not so utterly new as may appear to persons of brief experience and briefer memories. The very first dash of spray presaging the tide of today came so long ago as 1907 when the Empire Trust Company sent Jeremiah J. Kennedy, consulting engineer and business expert, out of his comfortable semi-retirement, to sink or salvage the American Biograph Company, which had failed to earn its bond interest. Kennedy, in spite of how much he was accursed by his contemporaries and how much he is remembered in bitterness by some of the surviving pioneers, rescued the industry from chaos and made it millions. He took his share and went back to 52 Broadway and brownstone comfort in Brooklyn, about 1913.

The new race of independents came into command. Bankers, some of them merely loan sharks, became conveniences, but the business did as it pleased with the bankers' money. Here and there came tentative splashes of the impending tide. As Lewis J. Selznick exited from World Film Corporation, in came Ricord Gradwell, salesman extraordinary, merchandiser of the pig iron Oliver typewriter and inventor of the slogan, "Say it with flowers." He was no whirlwind success in the pictures, but he did represent banker effort. Again, now nearly a dozen years ago, came the spectacular if ineffective impact of the acid H. D. H. Connick marching rather under the house flag of Kuhn, Loeb & Company for his day on the Famous Players-Lasky stage.

EDWARD RICHMOND TINKER, a New Englander from "downtown," a banker of note and director of many corporations. He goes places and raises birds for fun.

But this is the story of Tinker at Fox, and not so much of why as who, because this dramatic industry thinks not in terms of abstract forces nearly so much as in concrete personalities. Mr. Tinker is the instrument, the reagent, to borrow a chemical term, of an inexorable business machinery and its laws which as generally pertain to industry as the law of gravity to the physical world. But he will deal and be dealt with as a man, an individual.

So, the other day, as I entered the walnut panelled office of the Fox president, a carpeted island of finance in a region of Tenth Avenue warehouses and tenements, I was swept by reminiscence in coming upon a man who seemed so very like that determined Jeremiah J. Kennedy of the days of mighty General Film, the very warrior against whom William Fox rose to power and in time to this same cloistered office.

Mr. Tinker is that pattern of man, deep chested and vigorous, positive, quietly spoken up to, but not at, the detonation point.

There is that about him which gives one the sense that he is in no hurry about anything at all, but that he is heading somewhere all the time very rapidly. His words come with a certain degree of care, without the outward color of special caution, for it seems he is not to be flushed into saying something on which he may change his mind on the basis of fuller information later. No totals will come from Tinker until all the figures are in and verified.

All of Tinker's working life, since he emerged from his novitiate clerkship in Wall Street and a career as a stellar bond salesman into executive position, has been spent getting other people to do things. Like all top rank executives his work has been working with manpower. Now, without knowing whether or not he plays the game, I would expect him to be a considerable spot at the table to be reckoned with in poker. I would expect him to prefer draw to stud, and to frown upon rounds of "roodles," seven card hands, deuces wild and such other silly eccentricities with which bad players hope to substitute luck for judgment and bring an adverse situation to chaos, with hope of loot.

Observation of his first contacts with several and widely variant types of men makes it appear that Tinker's first concern is taking measures. There is nothing obvious about it. The technique consists mostly in creating an apparently casual opportunity to let the subject under examination talk and do things until there is a supply of index material. He is now engaged in doing just that with the motion picture industry, with the Fox Film Corporation, and with the manpower machine that he has come uptown to operate.

Mr. Tinker is now 53 years old. He is Yankee born and bred, from North Adams, in Massachusetts, was graduated from Williams with an A. B. in the class of '99. He majored in mathematics and history, which would appear to be just the thing in view of the higher mathematics and the other heritages of the current Fox film situation. Maybe calculus and Caesar can write the answer.

No matter what happens at Fox, Tinker is a success, a personal hand-made success. He started running things at school. At Williams he was the manager of the baseball team, and in those days at Williams baseball counted more than football. He was designed for an athlete and he could play a good game of ball, but consideration of certain elements of policy concerning the attitude of the folks at home kept him off the diamond. He had a great interest in baseball, but he knows too much about it as it is played on the commercial field to ever see a game, unless it be in a world series where the players' personal stakes give a certain guaranty of performance.

Just incidentally Mr. Tinker has some notions of his own about professionalism and college sports. The line of amateurism is drawn a shade fine, he observes. "If a man is working his way through college and incidentally gets a summer job as a hotel waiter because he can also play ball, that is no more the business of the college athletic board than if the man got his job because he could play the tuba."

Out of college Mr. Tinker came to New York and Wall Street, just because it was the big arena where more things happened and more opportunities blossomed. Apparently the prospect of big-time competition did not disturb him. He got a clerkship with an investment house through college connections. He presently decided that he had experience enough to go elsewhere where he would feel free to seek promotion. He did not enjoy a situation where, no matter what his working record, his promotion would be credited to influence. In time his new post seemed to have limitations. He heard of an opportunity in Milwaukee and took the Twentieth Century west one week-end. Monday he was back with a new job in the West and proffered his resignation, because he "wanted to sell bonds." When his chief found that the young man had sold himself between trains in Milwaukee, he decided that Tinker possibly could sell bonds. Presently the ambitious young man had from his house the prize territory of New York.

From 1907 to 1912 he was a member of Rhoades & Company, and in '12 became a vice-president of the Chase National Bank. The Chase then had but two or three vice-presidents. That was in the days before banks began to elect vice-presidents in squads to go with the office furniture. In 1920 Mr. Tinker became the president of Chase Securities Corporation, and in 1925 chairman of the executive committee of the Chase National Bank and of the Chase Securities Corporation; he retired in January, 1927, and devoted two years to travel in Europe and South America. In 1929 he accepted the presidency of the Interstate Equities Corporation, an investment trust organized and sponsored by Bancamerica-Blair Corporation, whose holdings were sold in November last to young Mr. Wallace Grove, an independent capitalist from the small loan business. However, Mr. Tinker remains president. Meanwhile, he is a director of 35 or so assorted corporations, in concerns ranging from banking to manufacturing, merchandise and oil, among them Chrysler Corporation, Barnsdall Corporation, Curtiss Wright, Sinclair Consolidated Oil, Glidden Company, General Foods Corporation, Wilson & Co., and White Motor Company. In Interstate Equities with Tinker continues the very New England and softly proper spoken Charles Wiggin, with an elegant taste in caviar and fifty pairs of shoes, a cousin of the Albert Wiggin of Chase National.
